CALTRANS OFFICIAL MAKES HOUSE CALL

■ Carmelite's Dilemma: Should I take advantage of buyer's market caused by proposed freeway?

By KIRSTIE WILDE

DEBORAH SMITH sees more than trees when she looks out the window of the home she rents on the edge of Hatton Canyon.

She sees opportunity, the chance to buy a house for half the price of anything similar in Carmel. The depressed value of Smith's rental is caused by the specter of the Hatton Canyon Freeway, which is scheduled to run somewhere through her view in 1998.

Smith has heard scary stories from freeway opponents about how big and ugly the proposed divided highway will be. She calls opponents "the good guys" and hopes they succeed in stopping the

Governor nixes $100,000 for pitch canker task force

By PAUL WOLF

CARMEL FORESTRY officials were sharply disappointed this week when they learned that Gov. Pete Wilson used his line-item veto power to nix a request for $100,000 in state funds to fight the pine pitch canker disease.

Carmel and other Central Coast cities are among the hardest hit by the incurable fungal disease, first identified in the village in 1993.

City officials aligned themselves with forestry officials throughout the state and with a key ally in the effort, Assemblyman Fred Keeley, D-Boulder. The assemblyman carried the request for money for research, conservation planning and tree disposal, and it made it all the way to the governor's desk.

"I thought it was a done deal," said Carmel City Forester Kelly. "I was very surprised."

Kelly serves as vice chair of the statewide Pitch Canker Task Force, which made the request to Keeley's office. Kelly noted that the task force originally wanted the assemblyman to lobby for $2 million, but Keeley's budget officer said that sum was well out of reach.

After exercising his veto, Wilson explained his decision in writing: "It is not clear this (financial) augmentation is needed at this time given the work of the task force."

At a meeting Tuesday, Kelly and Carmel Forest and Beach Commission Chairwoman Karen Ferlito accused the governor of ignorance, saying the task force has an action plan, but no source of funding "to implement it."

That sentiment was echoed by the assemblyman, who wrote to Kelly on Sept. 23 saying, "It is evident from the governor's statement that an education process is needed at the highest levels of state government before this disease receives the serious attention it deserves.

Kelly said the task force will now pursue federal funding through grant pro-

Tourist run down on Carmel sidewalk makes journey home

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER SPENDING over a month at the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, Joseph Parisi — the man who was hit on a crowded Mission Street sidewalk in August — finally made the trip home to Illinois this week.

Parisi has been recovering from the surgery for his leg, which was necessary to put his bones back together — with surgical pins.

Parisi suffered from a severe "open fracture," in which the bone broke through the skin. During the accident, the car struck Parisi's leg, "folding" it over the concrete planter box he was standing next to, according to paramedics.

After the surgery, doctors wanted to keep the leg as immobile as possible in order to insure that the skin grafts would take, according to sources who have been monitoring the situation.

Whether or not Parisi regains the full use of his leg will depend on the success his physical therapy, which will most likely be a long process, sources say.

■ Special report: Carmel's biggest citizens' network willing to fight for, not merely stand by, idea of 'residents first'

By PAUL WOLF

TALK TO any dedicated, longtime member of the Carmel Residents Association, and it won't be long before you hear a reference to the group's guiding principle: "Carmel is primarily, essentially and predominantly a residential city."

The words were written by former city attorney Argyll Campbell in the preamble to the 1929 zoning ordinance. They are, it seems, embraced by virtually every inhabi-

Three-year-old Mark Anthony Alamillo Jr. steals the show as the star mariachi dancer at Sunday's Fiesta.

Mission Fiesta 'blessed' with sunshine, banner year

THE SUNSHINE, colorfully costumed dancers, and tasty dinners at Sunday's Carmel Mission Fiesta made many people wish the day wouldn't end.

In fact, the event was so successful that organizers had to make a mad dash at 4 p.m. to buy 200 more chickens. People stayed late, listening to strolling musicians and browsing the arts and crafts booths well into the evening.

Although the proceeds haven't been fully tallied, so far $20,000 has been raised for Junipero Serra School.

Over 1,700 chicken and tri-tip dinners were sold. Sno-cones were also a big hit. As many adults were gobbling up the icy refreshers as children.

This is the first year that the fiesta featured the dinner as the main fund raiser instead of the traditional raffle ticket sales, according to one of the organizers, Barbara Davi.

Two lucky winners walked away with $500 prizes: Ron Garabed of Pebble Beach and Xavier and Jan Urpi of Carmel.

Joining the mariachi singers and dancers this year, were strolling musicians, country line dancers, Flamenco and Irish dancers and bagpipers.

"It was a banner year," said Davi.

The unusually warm weather spiced up the event a little, but Davi explained, "We're usually pretty blessed that day."

Stranger's gift of a scooter means newfound freedom for Carmelite

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WITH EVERY painstaking step she's made with her walker, Julie Colletto has managed to brighten up Carmel with her smile: Now with the help of a new motorized scooter — the gift from a stranger — she can zip around town and wave to friends on every corner.

Julie Colleto enjoys her newfound mobility near Carmel Beach.

Colletto's enthusiasm is infectious. "Look at this," she says, pointing toward the restless ocean on a lazy Friday afternoon. "Can you believe this. We live in heaven."

It's hard to argue with her.

Colletto, 40, takes in the beach like someone who's been away from it for years. In a major way, Colletto was kept at a distance — the trek down to Scenic Drive was simply too difficult with her walker.

That was before the scooter. "This has been the best summer of my life," Colletto said.

The surprise came about a month ago when Colletto was maneuvering up Dolores Street with her walker and saw a woman on a scooter like the one she'd eventually own herself. "I went crazy," Colletto said. "I told her I wanted one."

"I'll buy you one," said the woman.

Colletto didn't believe it. But after a month of newfound freedom, she can't imagine life without her scooter. She "cruises" the entire stretch of Scenic and heads all the way down to The Crossroads to do her shopping.

During the mornings, Colletto helps out her mother at the family's Homestead Inn, but the afternoons are her treasures — exploring the winding streets of Carmel and chatting with the many friends she's made over the years.

HOUSE CALL

project, or delaying it another 40 years.

But just in case they lose the battle, Smith wants to know exactly how much the freeway will affect her house before she plunks down the money to buy it.

"I called Caltrans to see if they could help me decide," she told The Pine Cone. And Smith was quite astonished when Project Manager José Poncé agreed to make a house call.

A mission from San Luis Obispo

Poncé drove from his office in San Luis Obispo to meet with Smith and her next-door neighbors on Wednesday afternoon. (He was 45 minutes late, and they joked that he must be stuck in traffic on Highway 1.)

Poncé brought his maps, plans, cross-sections and sketches of the freeway and stood on each home's deck to point out where the road would be built. He explained to Smith that a berm would shield much of the freeway from her house and would be about 325 feet away. He also promised to come back in two weeks with a sketched cross-section of her particular view of the project.

"I will be deciding whether to buy this house based on what he shows me," said Smith

John and Sabreh Gross bought the home next door three years ago, and say they got a very good deal on it. Since the parkway has been in the works for decades, Sabreh thought there was a good chance it wouldn't be built at all. Now John says he has a "gut feeling" that the fight is over and the road will be built next year.

"We wanted information from the horse's mouth, instead of a rumor here and rumor there," said Sabreh, explaining why they wanted to meet Poncé. She is lucky to own a gorgeous, massive oak tree that already screens much of Hatton Canyon, and wants to plan more protection from the freeway if it is really coming.

"Maybe we can enclose our deck, or reinforce it and add some big plants," said Sabreh.

A freeway model

Mayor Ken White and the Carmel City Council are officially opposed to the freeway, and voted in September to spend another $2000 to support the Hatton Canyon Coalition's court fight against it. Carmel also asked Caltrans to build a new, three-dimensional model of the entire project so locals could get a clearer picture of how it will look.

The model is under construction, and Poncé predicts it will be completed and delivered to Carmel in January. Until then, he is willing to call on homeowners individually, and point out how the freeway will affect them.

After their meeting with Poncé, the residents were impressed. "We think these Caltrans people are ogres, but he was a very sincere, nice man. He seemed genuinely interested in helping us," Smith said. "The freeway will be much farther away than I expected, and the berm he described is absolutely good news. I feel much better."

Good enough to buy the house? "It depends how cheap I can get it," said Smith.

Colletto sees her life now as a gift, a second chance after the car accident 16 years ago that forced her to start life over — "like a newborn," she said.

Driving home at 2 a.m. on Highway 1 near Monterey Peninsula College, Colletto fell asleep at the wheel and drove off a 100-foot drop off.

'This has been the best summer of my life.'

— Julie Colletto

"I was drinking and driving like a fool," Colletto said.

The 24-year-old was thrown out the sunroof of her car and smashed her brain stem. After two weeks, Colletto found herself in a hospital bed, unable to walk with a year-long hospital stay ahead of her.

When her parents gave her a wheelchair, Colletto refused to use it, saying she'd rather crawl. Out of sheer determination, Colletto learned how to use her legs and her body again. She's taken years of physical therapy and now boasts that she can ride 15 miles on the stationary bicycle at MPC.

Colletto doesn't have a secret for keeping a good-natured attitude after living through hardships. She says she just loves people and life.

Strangely enough, after her car accident, the only memories that Colletto retained were happy ones. She couldn't remember her grandmother's death or any other unhappy times.

People often tell Colletto she should become a motivational speaker. But she says she's not looking for a place in the limelight. "I can motivate people when I see them on the street," she explained.

C.V. Library may expand into Buckeye

EXPANSION PLANS may be in the works for the Carmel Valley Library, which is so highly regarded by locals that they keep it open one extra day each week with private funds.

The plan, how to pay for it and the overall goals and services of the library will be discussed at a public meeting of Friends of Carmel Valley Library at 6 p.m. Tuesday at the library on Carmel Valley Road.

A commercial building on the west side of the library is being considered for the expansion. Locals still call it the old Buckeye Restaurant, even though it closed many years ago and has housed other ventures including a tofu processing firm and an upholstery business.

Representatives of community organizations will discuss funding necessary for renovation of the interior, shelving installation and electrical upgrading.

Robert McElroy, head librarian for Monterey County Free Libraries, will also attend the special meeting October 7.

CRA: A decade and counting

tant of the village, but no group of citizens has done more to defend, interpret and update that statement than the CRA.

As they now celebrate their 10th anniversary, members consider themselves the staunchest defenders of this time-honored principle of residential primacy.

CRA President Mary Condry offered a succinct vision of preserving residential character against the growing pressures of the '90s: "We don't want Carmel to become just another beach town," she explained.

Not a controversial statement. But controversies large and small arise when specific cases are at hand, and the rights of individuals are pitted against the rights of the community.

Siding with the forces of regulation can be the same as accepting the role of the bad guy. And by endorsing candidates and issues, the CRA's presence is frequently partisan despite the generally nonpartisan arena of local politics.

One of the founding members of the Carmel Residents Association was Clayton Anderson, who appears here with his 'Clayton for Carmel' button, which he used in his 1988 mayoral bid against Jean Grace.

"Where they stand for residential values and how they are inherent to this village, that is where I see exactly eye-to-eye with the CRA," said Councilwoman Barbara Livingston, a member who served on the CRA board before her first election in 1992.

But between elections and during harmonious phases, such as the current one, the CRA has focused on quiet service. Its key accomplishments over the years include a monthly beach cleanup and the staging of annual meet-your-congressman and Citizen of the Year events.

Added Livingston: "The CRA doesn't just sit around and lament about certain things; they actually get up and help people, clean up the beach and raise awareness about this beautiful place in which we live."

Much company

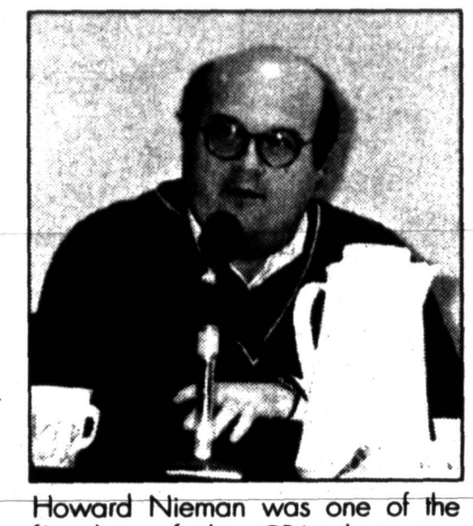
The CRA is not alone as a citizens' network in the village, but other organizations are different in size, makeup, scope and activities. Here is a brief overview:

■ When it was formed four years ago, Yes for Carmel originally had the makings of becoming a true opposition front to the CRA, but that never quite happened as it consciously steered clear of politics and focused on social events.

"Unlike the CRA, we won't stand up for things; that's not what we do," said Pat Sippel, secretary for Yes for Carmel, whose 230-person membership has "almost no overlap" with the CRA.

One stand-out member of both is Ken White, who has served since his election in 1992 as Carmel's "bridge builder" politician par excellence.

There is, however, a philosophical divide between Yes for Carmel and the CRA. Sippel said there is a subtle "business bent" that pervades the views of most people loyal to Yes for Carmel.



Howard Nieman was one of the founders of the CRA, but soon soured on the group and gave up his membership.

■ Voice of Carmel is a small poll-taking organization whose mission is to reflect the community's wishes, not influence them, according to Sippel, its president.

It has polled residents and property owners on big topics like the Hatton Canyon Freeway and the parking problem. Although inactive for some time, the group is expected to mail out more polls in the future.

■ Northeast Carmel Neighbors Association looks out for the interests of one particular quadrant, as its name suggests.

Like Yes for Carmel, it shies away from politics. Its focus is social functions and neighborhood improvements, such as the renovation of Vista Lobos, which the group spearheaded.

■ Carmel Citizens for Good Government is a 12-person think tank that has the courage, or presumptuousness, depending on your view, to tell the city council when it is moving in the wrong direction.

Dormant recently, it made a name for itself in the early 1990s when the city was in the grip of financial hardships and cutbacks and the group presented a detailed critique of its fiscal management.

In 1992, in an effort to be a countervailing force to the CRA, the group interviewed and endorsed candidates for city council. It was not heard from again, however, in the 1994 and 1996 elections.

CCGG board member Howard Neiman said this week that the 12-member group, which includes former mayor Clint Eastwood, will become active again should the Sunset Center Project become clearly viable. Nieman, who opposes the large-scale project envisioned, said the redevelopment plan is major enough to warrant a sharp, critical opinion from the CCGG.

Largest organization

The CRA, with 550 members, is the largest and the most far-reaching in its activities, offering public service, educational events, social events and political activism, such as endorsing candidates and issues.

> 'The CRA doesn't just sit around and lament about certain things; they actually get up and help people, clean up the beach and raise awareness about this beautiful place in which we live.'
> — Councilwoman Barbara Livingston

While Yes for Carmel also believes in the principles of the city's charter, it was founded, in large part, on the principal of supporting local businesses. The core group actually began with a political goal in 1993 — the passage of Measure H, the commercial rezoning measure that the CRA strongly opposed.

The measure passed by a mere 10 votes. Yes for Carmel has since been apolitical, never appearing before the city council or in front of the post office to lobby.

The CRA's continued commitment to taking political stands has been the single biggest magnet for criticism

"I stopped being a member when I joined the planning commission and felt that the organization shouldn't be taking formal positions," said Nieman, who, ironically, helped found the group in 1987.

Nieman and other citizens, including Skip Lloyd, Jim Holliday and Jane Mayer, formed the CRA to fight a Mayor Eastwood-appointed committee that was considering revisions to the General Plan. There is widespread agreement that committee's inability to carry out changes had much to do with the testimony and involvement of early CRA members.

Nieman said he felt that the CRA became overly eager to support strict regulations, and he found the group did not conform with his middle-of-the-road approach to local government.

Councilwoman Paula Hazdovac, who attends Yes for Carmel meetings but is not a member, also criticized the CRA for adopting platforms, which she believes is inappropriate in nonpartisan local politics.

Nevertheless, the CRA continues to be a force in city council chambers, with three of the five council members (White, Livingston and Marshall Hydorn) holding CRA memberships.

In spring of 1996, the combined force of incumbent Livingston and candidate Hydorn was a crucial factor in Hydorn's victory over incumbent Phil Coniglio, a local businessman with no ties to the CRA.

'All independent'

Livingston noted that she and Hydorn disagree regularly on matters small and large, showing "We are all independent and that is how it should be. No one at the CRA is telling me how to vote, but when they speak at the podium, I am interested in what they say, just as I am with anyone who comes forward."

Joining forces as CRA-endorsed candidates, Marshall Hydorn and Barbara Livingston were both elected to four-year city council terms in 1996.

The CRA has been on the losing side of couple of major battles, including the 1991 effort to keep strict limits on residential floor-area ratios on new houses and the 1993 rezoning.

Longtime CRA member Howard Skidmore commented on the remarkably quiet political landscape since Measure H four years ago. "Now that the battles have died down, we are mainly sticking to our social and educational functions."

$3 million grant to prepare college grads for good jobs

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE KEY to a bright economic future in Monterey Bay may be found deep beneath the ocean waves and leaders from local schools are ready to start that journey.

A local consortium of colleges just received a $3 million grant from the National Science Foundation to start a center for marine advanced technology education (MATE).

The MATE center will train students for ocean-related jobs like cleaning up oil spills and preventing coastal erosion, according to Tom Murphree, a professor at the Naval Postgraduate School.

The Monterey Peninsula School District, Hartnell, Cabrillo and Monterey Peninsula Colleges and the Naval Postgraduate School are all involved in setting up the new center, which will have satellite programs in Alaska, Louisiana, Maine, and Florida.

"Globally more than 70-percent of the population lives within an hour of the coast," said Kam Matray, coordinator for research and development at Monterey Peninsula Unified School District (MPUSD).

Since 1993, educators have been investigating the demand for jobs in marine technology industries. They found that while there are plenty of PhD-level scientists around, there's a definite gap in the trained-technician department.

"We realized what a terrible state of disarray this whole field was in," Matray said. One of the other goals of MATE will be setting up a national clearinghouse to give the last word on jobs, internships, funding sources and educational institutions in the marine industry.

National network

Perhaps the project's most important goal will be a national network of colleges, businesses, military institutions, research labs and professional societies in the marine field.

There are 40 different community colleges nationwide doing marine work, said Deidre Sullivan, professor at Hartnell College. Instead of reinventing training programs already developed, the MATE program will provide a way to share the information.

While research is often the first field people associate with marine technology, it only accounts for a portion of the job opportunities out there. Deep sea mining, oil extraction, aquaculture and undersea fiber-optic cable installation are all growing industries.

These opportunities sometimes require a unique educational approach. Sullivan explained that a recently developed technology for remote operating vehicles (ROVs) made the boom in the Gulf of Mexico's oil industry possible. However there's a shortage of technicians who can work the ROVs.

"When an average ROV costs $1 to $1.5 million, you're not going to have them at a lot of colleges," Sullivan said. Instead, students may need to go to the industry and train on the actual equipment.

College prep or nowhere?

The idea of tackling industry skills in school may be a forerunner for the path U.S. education needs to take in the future. "Do most students need a college degree, and if they have one are they employable?" Sullivan asked.

Students need direction early on, preferably before they get to college, Sullivan said. "There are two tracks in high school: college prep and nowhere," she said. "What we need is a highly skilled work force."

Matray discovered that one Maryland-based company that retrieves objects from the ocean floor, Deep Sea International, is expecting 1,800 job openings in the next few years.

After its initial three years, MATE can reapply to the National Science Foundation for an additional $2 million. After that, MATE leaders hope the program will be self-sustaining through ties to marine businesses and schools.

It's a two-plaque day for Tularcitos' Diane Garneau

By KIERSTEN MCCUTCHAN

WITH HER family nearby beaming with pride, a Tularcitos Elementary School teacher who was honored for excellence in special education instruction could not have been more delighted when she received a bonus award — "Employee of the Month" from Carmel Unified School District.

As the first award was announced by a representative of the Community Advisory Committee, which consists of parents who look out for the interests of special education, Diane Garneau humbly accepted the award.

Many letters commending Garneau's 20 years of work were read and several children rose and presented her with flowers.

Diane Garneau, Special Educator of the Year, holds her award and a bouquet of flowers given to her by children.

After listening to praise from her colleagues, Garneau prepared to take her seat. Then, the school board announced that Garneau was also chosen as the district's September Employee of the Month.

She exited with two plaques, instead of one.

Other business

The board learned of the on-time opening of the Tularcitos' Preschooler Parent Co-op trailer.

Chuck Phillips, principal of the adult school who shares the trailer, expressed satisfaction about finally having a place to go, calling the event "an exciting adventure for us."

Board members and parents agree that there are still some rough edges in the co-op, and rest rooms are still not installed. Phillips predicted everything will be finished in two weeks.

Flaherty's trademark giant shell disappears during dinner hour, may be gone for good

THE HUNDRED-POUND scallop shell that's adorned the front of Flaherty's Oyster Bar for 19 years disappeared without a trace.

Both General Manager Chris Bonner and his assistant were seating customers one night last month and when they returned to the front of the restaurant they found trampled flowers and a gaping hole in the planter where the shell had been.

"Somebody wanted it and I don't know who," Bonner said.

The caper must have been planned ahead of time because the 2-by-3-foot shell was so heavy and it disappeared in such a short period of time, Bonner said.

"You and I couldn't lift it and carry it 30 yards," he said. Bonner doesn't have much hope of recovering the shell, valued at $250. "She's a goner," he said.

Bobcat returns to 'Bobcat Heaven' in CV

By TAMARA GRIPPI

MONTHS OF work and thousands of mice dinners enabled one bobcat to make his entrance back into the wilds of Carmel Valley this week: And in the eyes of his caretakers and the SPCA, even one more bobcat makes a difference.

When his cage was opened, "R.C.," (Rob Cat) spent two minutes thinking it over before he made the leap to freedom in the Mitteldorf Preserve, eight miles by 4-wheel drive from Carmel Valley Road.

R.C.'s return to the wild will help to maintain a delicate balance in nature's cycle, according to Maia Carroll, public relations coordinator for the Monterey County SPCA.

"We've put him back in nature's cycle," Carroll said.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder
FROM CHILDHOOD TO ADULTHOOD
A COMMUNITY EDUCATION WORKSHOP

Attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) has become a household term that is too often mis-understood. Differing views among the experts on how to diagnose and treat the disorder make this a controversial topic. Today, we not only know more about how to treat and cope with the disorder as it affects youth, but we know more about how adults are affected as well.

Joseph Greene, MD, is co-director of Child and Adolescent Services for the Behavioral Health Services division of Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. He provides consultation for children and adolescents experiencing symptoms of ADHD. He will discuss the dilemma of diagnosis, disorders confused with ADHD, and advances in treatment.

Ronald Tintner, MD, is a neurologist on the medical staff of Community Hospital. He will review both diagnostic and treatment issues along with the disorders as they persist into adulthood.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 3:00-5:00 P.M.

Main conference rooms
Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula

Drs. Greene and Tintner will be available to answer questions from the audience. A certificate of completion will be available.

Refreshments will be served.

A TOUR DE FORCE IN OLD CARMEL

Coffee Break

By BEVERLY BORGMAN

NASTY, NASTY, nasty! That's what I call Tracie Cone's column in the San Jose Mercury last Sunday.

Granted, columnists are always looking for "pegs" to hang a column on, and Cone is no exception. In this case, she latched on to the recent brouhaha over Carmel's decision to not allow commercial walking tours. From that point on, we were fair game.

I'd quote some of her more outrageous statements, but why give her more ink? Suffice to say, she played fast and loose with the truth in order to get a few cheap laughs.

But aside from that, I have to admit I'm having a little problem with this ban on commercial walking tours myself. "Intrusive" seems to be the key word here. The walking tourists are said to "intrude" on our privacy.

Pul-eeze! Is somebody feeling just a bit bitchy because someone else figured out how to make a buck by taking some folks for a stroll?

I live half a block outside the city limits, but near a motel. I frequently look out my window to see curious visitors inspecting my garden or the fairy-tale architecture of the house down the street. So???? It's not as if they were coming in and sitting down for dinner, or grabbing the remote when I'm watching Larry King.

Guidance to the poor souls

Still, if the powers-that-be stand fast on this issue, then I guess it's up to us to give some guidance to the poor souls who must find their own way around town, unassisted.

For starters, I suggest a Monday morning when most of the motels have emptied, and shopkeepers are out with their brooms sweeping the front sidewalk, saying friendly hellos to each other.

A crisp autumn morning would be perfect, perhaps after a shower (if we ever have one again), when the pine needles are damp underfoot and the red and gold liquid amber trees are twinkling in the sunlight.

Most parking spaces would still be vacant, allowing a view of the architecture along Ocean Avenue without a dozen BMWs from Silicon Valley in the way. One might buy a warm croissant and a mug of French Roast and take it to what I refer to as "my" bench, adjacent to the Harrison Library. (I'm feeling generous today.)

I was out on just such a lovely Monday recently, reminded of a pen-pal in Australia whose every thought is of returning to Carmel. Joan is her name.

Her letters tell of heartfelt tears as she reads her two-week-old Pine Cone, remembering the soft gray fog drifting through the pines, and the sunsets when people at the beach actually applaud the glorious end of day.

I thought of Joan as I listened to the brazen black crows making their Spanish castanet sound in contrast to the soft gurgle of nearby pigeons.

At that moment a young couple walked by, and the woman said, "Let's take an extra day and just stay HERE."

Obviously, she was willing to abandon other travel plans in favor of just one more Carmel day. I could imagine them topping it off with a toast of chardonnay in the intimate Cypress Inn bar where their dog would be as welcome as they are.

Snow White effect

If they stayed that extra day, I imagined them experiencing the "Snow White effect," that delightful surprise Snow White felt when she found the adorable cottage in the woods with seven miniature beds. In Carmel, exploration in the woods may yield an adorable cottage which houses the perfect piece of jewelry or the long-sought piece of art — better than a bunch of untidy dwarfs any day.

Crossing Dolores Street on my way home, I encountered another couple. He was about to take her picture with the street of galleries as background. I asked (as I so often do), "May I take a picture of BOTH of you?"

"Oh yes," he said with the most charming French accent, as he showed me how to "fo-COOS" the camera.

There we three stood, smack in the middle of the street — two foreign visitors who had just fallen in love with Carmel, and one sentimental old broad who fell in love with it long ago.

But poor Tracie Cone. All she can do is take pot-shots and make wisecracks.

Truth of the matter is, she'd live here if she could!

Carmel's David Dilworth charges county with ignoring pesticide risks

By KIRSTIE WILDE

LOCAL ACTIVIST David Dilworth sued Monterey County this week, charging that it "illegally re-approved the Rancho San Carlos development without disclosing the types or amounts of pesticides to be used on the golf course" or how the chemicals could hurt frogs and fish at the ranch.

David Dilworth

Dilworth, who runs a software business in Carmel, is acting as his own attorney.

Dilworth has been a frequent critic of the way the county regulates pesticides, saying, "It's a matter of negligence. They don't know what pesticides are being used on local golf courses. There are thousands of different pesticides, and they don't even have a list of all of them. If the county doesn't know exactly which ones are being used, how can they possibly test to see if they are getting into our water supply?"

When pressed by The Pine Cone to produce any evidence of pesticide contamination in the local water supply, Dilworth said, "I'm not saying that there is, but if you haven't measured for it, you can't say that there isn't."

Roger Ward, the water quality superintendent for Cal-Am Water Co. has good news for Dilworth, and anybody else worried about pesticides in the water supply. In his 25 years of testing the water from "each and every well in our system, the San Clemente Reservoir, every surface water supply, any and every place we draw water, we have never found a single pesticide of any kind in any of our water supplies," he said Thursday.

Ward, a chemist, also refuted Dilworth's claim that "there are thousands of pesticides and they don't even test for all of them," by explaining how the process works. First, the federal and state governments have a list of more than 140 different chemical compounds (pesticides) which have turned up in the water supply somewhere in the United States.

The government requires all large utilities (like Cal-Am) to test for each of those at least every three years — Ward says Cal-Am does it annually. The regulations require monthly testing if any illegal pesticide contamination is found. That, according to Ward, has never happened at a Cal-Am water source.

The tests would also detect any other pesticide in the water, according to Ward, even if they were not among the 140 most-common compounds. "We use seven different sophisticated methods, using instrumentation called gas chromatography and mass spectroscopy which point out any foreign compound," explained Ward. "It's like your fingerprints. If something is even slightly amiss, we would be alerted to investigate."

Ward says the expensive testing apparatus (located at Cal-Am's parent company in Belleville, Illinois) not only would detect any one of the thousands of pesticide compounds that exist. It also "tells you exactly what the concentrate is of each and every pesticide," according to Ward.

'Green Graveyards?'

Dilworth refers to golf courses as "green graveyards" because he says they don't support any life except turf grass. He says he filed his lawsuit because the environmental impact report on Rancho San Carlos didn't adequately study how pesticides on the golf course could affect red-legged frogs and steelhead trout in nearby creeks.

According to Tom Gray of Rancho San Carlos, the golf course has three separate systems to keep pesticides out of the water:

- All "uphill water" which might otherwise flow across the golf course after a rain will be either diverted around the fairways or drained underneath them.
- The water that falls on the course through irrigation or rain will be captured and run through the RSC water treatment plant. The tertiary-treated water will then be recycled to water the fairways and greens again.
- The "golf trail" (as Gray calls it) is environmentally superior because it covers only 73 irrigated acres, about half the size of an average golf course. "Less grass, less water, less chemicals," says Gray.

Gray declined to comment specifically on Dilworth's lawsuit. He did point out that the issue of pesticide use was "exhaustively studied" in the EIR. (Dilworth's own comments in the document ran 30 pages, and he testified in public hearings on the pesticide issue several times.)

Stuart Cohen, PhD, called by Gray "a recognized expert on control of pesticides and fertilizers on golf

Carmel Forestry commission says small brass memorial plates are OK

By PAUL WOLF

LOCALS WHO want to memorialize a loved one should be able to include small plaques or "plates" next to trees they donate to the city, the Forest and Beach Commission decided Tuesday.

A majority on the commission argued that a tasteful, three-and-a-half-inch-long brass label with the departed's name engraved on it could not be considered an affront to the character of Carmel.

But three commissioners — Bob Kohn, Clayton Anderson and Gary Girard — expressed concerns about "clutter" and "eyesores" of memorial plates.

Also opposing the memorials was City Forester Gary Kelly. "I am concerned about a proliferation of plaques," he said. "I think the system we have now is working." Currently, donations of trees or benches are memorialized in a group of brass labels on a wall at city hall.

The forest and beach department receives only a handful of requests each year for memorial trees and benches. Kelly said when he tells people they can plant the tree or put in a bench, but cannot label the gift, they generally understand the policy and make the donation anyway.

The new policy approved this week will have to go to the council for final approval. The issue arose when Planning Commissioner Sue McCloud urged a change in policy to allow unobtrusive memorials.

The ordinance that the commission now supports requires that the memorial plates be small and unobtrusive, and also specifies that the plates can not be affixed to the trees themselves.

They may be attached, for example, to a supporting post.

Forestry commissioner Roy Thomas expressed what sounded like opposition to the new ordinance, but ended up voting in favor of allowing name plates.

Said Thomas: I can't see a forest with little brass plaques for everyone. Everyone likes to be immortalized, but a whole forest of plaques is clutter."

courses" also wrote a 75-page report on water risk assessment which "refuted each and every one of Dilworth's claims" before the Board of Supervisors, according to Gray. Cohen has a doctorate in in physical organic chemistry from George Washington University. Dilworth says he has a high school diploma.

On the issues of frogs and fish, Gray says they were also extensively studied in the EIR. After the frog was listed as a threatened species, "We received a 'nation-wide permit' from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service that specifically said there is no impact on the red-legged frog," according to Gray.

He added that Judge Robert O'Farrell has already ruled those studies were "adequate and appropriately certified."

Carmel resident, who penned dozens of screenplays, was once Hollywood's top-paid female writer

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WORKING BEHIND the scenes as a screenwriter, Dorothy Kingsley Durney earned the admiration of some of Hollywood's brightest lights, who speak well of her to this day.

OBITUARY

Durney died Sept. 26 at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. She was 86.

"It was just a joy to work with her," said actress Esther Williams, who starred in "Bathing Beauty," "Neptune's Daughter," and other movies Durney wrote. "We were two career ladies before liberated woman were celebrated," Williams told The Pine Cone this week.

"She was an enchanting hostess," said actress Joan Fontaine, who lives in Carmel Highlands. "She was a very important script writer. Very gracious, modest and attractive."

An inventive and adventurous person, the child of show business parents, Durney was ready to tackle any challenge before her. However, she didn't set out for glory when she sat down to write her first screenplay: She was only looking for a way to make a living, said her son Terry Kingsley-Smith.

Bedridden for some time after the birth of her third child, Durney started listening to the comedy hours on the radio. "If I can't write better than that," she decided, "I can at least write as well."

Durney moved to Hollywood and got her first real break as a writer for the Edgar Bergen radio show.

From there, she began her screenwriting career that would include over 25 movies. During Durney's 20-year contract at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, she was the script writer of "Kiss Me Kate," "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," "Angels in the Outfield" and "Green Mansions."

At MGM, Durney was often called, "Literary Lana," a nickname combining her writing talent and a resemblance to actress Lana Turner, Kingsley-Smith said.

Dorothy Durney, whose nom de plume was Dorothy Kingsley, is seen here with Cole Porter on the set of 'Kiss Me Kate,' for which she wrote the screenplay.

Ahead of her time

Although women screenwriters were a rarity in Hollywood during the 1940s and '50s, Durney was never discriminated against, according to her son. She was the highest-paid woman writer in Hollywood at the time, according to her daughter, Christine Durney Armanasco.

Williams said that she and Durney developed "instant rapport" when they first met on the set of "Bathing Beauty."

"When there were changes (in the movie), she'd always call me," Williams said. "We had a very respectful relationship."

Although Durney broke new ground as a screenwriter and later as a wine maker in Carmel Valley, she never became star-struck with her own success.

"She always wanted to create beauty, but she was a solid and grounded person," Armanasco said. "She always had time for her children. She always had an ear ready."

Durney wrote the scripts for "Pal Joey" and "Pepe" at Columbia Studios and "Can-Can" and "Valley of the Dolls" at Twentieth Century-Fox. Durney was a popular figure in the close-knit Hollywood community. "She had a wide range of friends and was gracious to them all," Armanasco said.

Pioneer in Carmel Valley

Ready for a new adventure, Durney and her husband, William, left Hollywood to start the first vineyard in Carmel. The couple planted the first grapes in 1968 and established the Durney Vineyard Brand in 1977.

The couple built a chapel on their property in 1973, according to their son-in-law David Armanasco, "because they always felt they could use all the help they could get."

The Durneys worked to establish Carmel Valley as its own Approved Viticultural Area, a distinction that put the area on the wine map.

"The Durneys helped to make not only Carmel Valley, but Monterey County, the producers of some of the world's finest wines," said Fred Dame, one of only 84 master sommeliers worldwide who set standards in the wine industry.

As leaders in local viticulture, the Durneys were among the first to use "dry farming" — relying on natural spring water and rain for irrigation. They never used insecticides, according to David Armanasco.

The Durney's Cabernet Sauvignon won many gold medals over the years, Armanasco said.

In every field she went into, Mrs. Durney gained the respect of her peers.

"She was a great lover of life, and that reflected on all those around her," Dame said.

Richard Smith, the owner of Paraiso Springs Vineyard in Soledad, remembered Mrs. Durney as someone who would always stand out at an event, wearing a suit and hat. "She was unique amongst her peers," Smith said.

"She was a wonderful lady," Williams said. "She will really be missed."

Durney is survived by four of her six children: Michael Durney of Carmel, Terry Kingsley-Smith of Los Angeles and Carmel, Susan Durney Mickelson of Lake Oswego, Ore., and Christine Durney Armanasco of Carmel; and nine grandchildren.

Memorial contributions may be sent to the Monterey County Symphony, P.O. Box 3956, Carmel, 93923.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

Florida is the leading destination for retirees from other states seeking hospitable climates and other attractions. Next comes California and then Arizona. The Southwestern state has created an Office of Senior Living in its Commerce Department to attract still more retirees for two reasons. First, people over 55 pump more than $13 billion a year into Arizona's economy. And second the first of the Baby Boomers are now in their 50s and beginning to think about where to live in retirement. Arizona's retiree population is expected to double by the year 2020.

Carmel Presbyterians to vote on pastor's future

MORE THAN two years of controversy at Carmel Presbyterian Church will culminate this Sunday when the congregation's members vote on a motion to "dissolve" the church's relationship with its Senior Pastor, Jon Wilson.

The vote comes in response to a petition signed by more than 25 percent of the church's active members calling for a decision on whether Pastor Wilson should be removed from the pulpit. Only members of the church will be permitted to attend the meeting.

Wilson's critics say his financial mismanagement and a lawsuit by a former church member charging Wilson with slander are two of the reasons why the pastor should be removed. Wilson paid $50,000 to settle the defamation lawsuit.

But Wilson's supporters say he is an inspirational church leader who has brought much-needed innovation to Carmel Presbyterian. "I am certain he'll be retained," one well-known church member told The Pine Cone.

In response to a request from The Pine Cone, Pastor Wilson issued this statement, "Yes, we do have a congregational meeting this Sunday. I'm trusting in God that somehow God will be glorified in the process of the meeting for the future of our church."

Ten years later, Stainbrook leads Padres from sideline

By JERRY STEWART

ALTHOUGH CARMEL High's 14-13 gridiron victory Sept. 20 over Santa Cruz wasn't a masterpiece, it was a win, and first year head coach Dave Stainbrook will take them any way he can.

Fielding a team that features only six seniors, the Padres are young and vulnerable. But Stainbrook hopes that his own experience and knowledge will help carry the squad to new heights.

Ten years ago Stainbrook, who grew up in Carmel Valley, led the Padres on the field as an MTAL All-League quarterback, and now Stainbrook is again leading the team, but this time around he's doing it from the sidelines.

"I have a real love for the game," said the 28 year old.

Stainbrook began building his coaching resume in 1993, starting with a stint as a junior varsity assistant and then moving up to an assistant position under former coach Mike Kelly.

As a player, Stainbrook spent four years learning the game as a back-up quarterback for Cal-Poly San Luis Obispo and Fresno State.

While at Fresno State, Stainbrook helped break in a freshman by the name of Trent Dilfer, who is now the starting quarterback for the NFL"s surprising Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

"Dilfer was my roommate, and I guess you could say he was sort of under my wing at the time."

As the Padres' new coach, Stainbrook is trying to pass on some of the knowledge he's learned to his new students.

"My philosophy is that sport itself is bigger than the game," Stainbrook said.

Better coastal access reason enough to approve Casa Palmero

The staff of the California Coastal Commission has performed a very important public service in its handling of the Pebble Beach Company's Casa Palmero project. The staff report, issued last week, bypasses irrelevant controversy and demagoguery and goes right to the key issues that the commission should consider when it meets near San Diego next week.

The Casa Palmero proposal involves conversion of a existing (and somewhat rundown) mansion immediately adjacent to the Lodge into a luxurious 24-unit inn and 24-room spa, together with construction of a 315-car underground parking garage where there's a parking lot today.

A vocal group of Pebble Beach residents has vigorously attacked the plan, decrying "creeping commercialism" in Del Monte Forest and complaining of too much traffic, especially on the roads leading to Casa Palmero. They want the Coastal Commission to eliminate the underground garage and reduce the size of the spa.

But a large group of Pebble Beach residents has countered with their own outspoken support of the project. The president of the Del Monte Forest Property Owners told the commission in a letter that the group represents over 1,700 property owners and that it has "on three separate occasions reviewed and approved all aspects of the Casa Palmero project."

Another letter-writer told how he had signed a petition opposing the Casa Palmero project — but only because he had been misled by project opponents about its scope. Having learned more about the plan, he urged it be approved. The "vast majority of residents in Pebble Beach who are truly informed" support Casa Palmero, he wrote.

We agree that most forest residents support the company's plans at Casa Palmero. The Pebble Beach company has a monumental record of community service and conservation which assures skeptical residents; other residents candidly admit that the company's outstanding management of its world-class facilities directly benefits them in the form of ever-increasing property values. Even Casa Palmero's staunchest critics have to admit that living near the fabulous Pebble Beach Lodge and golf course — a commercial facility which would be bitterly fought if proposed today — has its benefits.

But none of that should concern the Coastal Commission. The commission's mandate is to protect and enhance California's coastal environment, and at the same time to make the coast more accessible to the public. We hope the commission will keep its "eye on the ball" when considering Casa Palmero.

The commission's staff is doing its best to see that happen.

For years the staff has been much stricter about protecting the coast than the commission has been. Unlike the commission, staff has been relatively immune to political considerations and has stayed true to its original purpose — enforcing the coastal act. A project which gets the nod from staff is almost always a project that is environmentally sound and which the public should support.

In this case, staff has wholeheartedly recommended that the Casa Palmero project be approved. The spa and underground garage have basically no impact on important coastal resources like wildlife, plant life, and water quality, and traffic concerns are minimal and easily mitigated, the staff says.

And staff cleverly came up with a way for the commission to approve Casa Palmero while greatly improving public access to the marvelous beach at Stillwater Cove — a beach which is very near Casa Palmero and the Lodge but which is barely used by the public today because it is so hard to reach.

The commission is being asked by its staff to approve the Casa Palmero plan, but only if the Pebble Beach Company agrees to reserve a large portion of the new parking garage for coastal visitors, and if the company creates a pathway leading from the garage directly to Stillwater Cove.

Happily, the Pebble Beach Company has already agreed to cooperate. A more-accessible Stillwater Cove is something that will greatly enhance enjoyment of the Pebble Beach shoreline by locals and visitors alike — something the coastal commissioners, including Casa Palmero critic Dave Potter, could be proud of.

The commission's course is clear: approve Casa Palmero and the parking garage, and let more people enjoy the beach at Stillwater Cove.

Letters to the Editor

Song reference missed

Dear Editor:

Food writer Jennifer Viegas went to great lengths in this week's column to relate food to jazz, presumably in honor of the Monterey Festival. Her reaching became more than just annoying when she trivialized Billie Holiday's Strange Fruit by calling it a "tribute to edible pleasures." It's a horrifying and heartbreaking song about the lynching of black people in America. Anyone who has heard it can never forget.

Marilyn Ross, Carmel

Ms. Viegas responds: "I apologize for mentioning this song in my article. Part of my research involved perusing album and song titles, and I should have looked further into the lyrics. Your point is well taken. Certainly my intention was not to trivialize the song's meaning." — Jennifer Viegas, The Bohemian Gourmet

City avoiding 'basic responsibility'

Dear Editor

The Pine Cone leads readers to believe Measure B is a bargain!

Why is our city trying to get out of paying for our ambulance?

The $13.00 per household amount they ask us to pay next year represents only .5% of the city budget this year. Does anyone really believe City Hall cannot budget in our basic health and safety needs? Why does the city council want to to take such a small percentage out of its budget and place a parcel tax initiative on the ballot (at the cost of $5,500.00) to collect it?

I support my fellow Carmelites in their desire for ambulance service and look to the city for prudence in providing for our health and safety needs. Mid Valley Fire District and the Highlands property taxes provide for ambulance service to their residents without the benefit of a city government/budget.

Why is our city trying to avoid this basic responsibility, our ambulance service?

Barbara Smoak, Carmel

Focus on ambulance: first of 2 parts

Editor's note: This column was submitted to The Pine Cone as an educational service. However, the newspaper will gladly publish articles by citizens both supporting and opposing Measure B.*

By KEN WHITE
Mayor, Carmel-by-the-Sea

NEXT MONTH, the citizens of Carmel-by-the-Sea are being asked to vote on Measure B, which proposes a special parcel tax to provide a secure funding base which will enable our excellent ambulance service to continue as we know it.

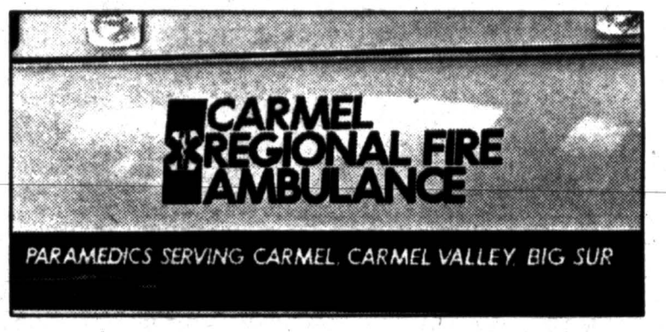
This fine emergency medical care is provided through a regional Joint Powers Agency (JPA) called Carmel Regional Fire Ambulance (CRFA).

The CRFA serves the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, the Mid Valley, Carmel Valley and Carmel Highlands Fire Districts. One of the JPA's two ambulances is housed in our fire station right in town on Sixth Avenue, thus enabling the CRFA to provide excellent service with response times averaging less than five minutes within the City 90 percent of the time. It may come as a surprise to many readers that the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea does not own this ambulance outright; rather, it is owned by the CRFA and provided to us through the JPA.

The CRFA budget is based on estimated expenses of $807,000. On the other hand, total annual revenues — payments from users of the service and from insurance companies — are just under $531,000.

Each member agency of CRFA pays its appropriate share of the operating deficit based on the number of ambulance calls within its boundaries each year. At the present time; Carmel-by-the-Sea is paying 39 percent, or approximately $108,000, of the deficit of $276,000.

From the service's inception in 1989 until 1996, the deficit was offset by a subsidy from the county of Monterey in the approximate annual amount of $300,000. This money comes from an assessment on every parcel of land in the County including, of course, those in Carmel-by-the-Sea. This assessment was put in place in 1989 and exists solely to support the emergency response delivery system throughout the entire county.



In January1996, the board of supervisors determined to enter into a contract with a single company to provide ambulance service for all county areas. Your CRFA member agencies did not support this action and, determined to continue the existing higher level of service, won the right in a court of law to do just that.

At the same time, the supervisors eliminated the annual subsidy, and the issue of funding the service was joined in court.

A judgment was issued in favor of the Carmel Ambulance agencies and the county was directed to provide a fair portion of the monies collected in the footprint of the those agencies. Regrettably, the county's definition of "fair portion" is $33,000, an amount considerably less than that collected from within the boundaries of our member agencies and totally insufficient to meet the needs of the CRFA.

Because of the budget shortfall, our ambulance service is presently operating without a permanent administrator. The chiefs of the member jurisdictions share in the management of the agency, with our own chief devoting approximately 20 percent of his time to this activity.

The countywide, private-contractor emergency medical care ambulance system would guarantee the city an eight-minute-or-less response 90 percent of the time, as averaged in all urban areas of the County. As we have said, our locally-controlled CRFA service, on the other hand, can give our citizens a response time of under five minutes 90 percent of the time.

It is vitally important that every citizen be fully informed of the facts of this important issue before the vote is cast. Next week in this space we will more specifically address the unique needs of our community with regard to emergency medical care and how the Carmel Regional Fire Ambulance meets those needs.

We will also address the actual fiscal impact on each lot of record, an impact now expected to be under $15 per year. In the meantime, we ask that all Carmelites acquaint themselves with accurate information, attend one of the public meetings being held to discuss the proposed special tax, and feel free to ask any and all questions about the issue.

grams. Eventually, the forester predicted, the problem will have to grow much worse before state funding is channeled into finding a solution.

Aggressive, but time-consuming, research is being conducted by the University of California system in search of resistant strains of Monterey pine. The state department of forestry and various cities have contributed tens of thousands of dollars to UC projects, Kelly said. (The city of Carmel has chipped in $3,500.)

The Pebble Beach Co. says it has spent $500,000 to study and fight the disease — some of it on its own research and some of it contributed to other efforts.

Carmel's forestry staff also is conducting an experiment, which will take many years to complete and analyze, using a greenhouse located next to the Carmel Police Department.

Kelly said he finds the governor's decision perplexing because the governor's personally appointed state forestry board has declared certain parts of the state — the Monterey Peninsula among them — "zones of infestation."

The forester admitted that these zones are now mainly of symbolic significance, but they prove the problem is serious.

In October of last year, the forestry department counted 582 trees on public property that show signs of infection. When the annual pitch canker survey is conducted later this month the number is expected to be much higher, Kelly said.

Dozens of trees have succumbed in the Carmel area and thousands more undoubtedly will die, Don Owen, a state entomologist, told The Pine Cone

A bit of good news was also received by the forestry commission this week, as it learned that the Pine Pitch Canker Invitational Golf Tournament, held Sept. 5 at the Pebble Beach Del Monte Golf Course, netted about $11,000 for the task force, according to Kelly.

CHOMP links with Surgery Center

Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula will buy a 49 percent share of the Monterey Peninsula Surgery Center, it was announced last week.

Outpatient surgery centers have become very popular with people needing surgery but who want to avoid the expense and inconvenience of hospitalization.

After it acquires its share, CHOMP will offer Peninsula surgeons a chance to puchase shares in the surgery center.

"With physcians as partners you can improve quality care and work together to control costs," CHOMP CEO Jay Hudson said.

'DELICIOUS VARIETY'—

Performing Arts Festival kicks off first week

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

THROW PROCRASTINATION to the winds! Tomorrow villagers and visitors will have to come to grips with selecting from 19 cultural offerings. These comprise the first-ever Carmel Performing Arts Festival's initial week of performances.

Readers are encouraged to peruse the official and complete program of events of the three-week festival, its venues and ticket prices — printed as a Pine Cone supplement last week and which is available free at newsstands, inns and stores all over town.

RIC MASTEN, poet, singer, storyteller.

An incomplete and mixed bag of random quick-picks follows. May these serve to whet readers' appetites for the varied cultural feast:

Correction — We want to be both accurate and fair, etc.

TWO LADIES from Salinas — one crabby, the other polite and civil — rang up at separate times last week to charge this column with:

"Giving Salinas a bad name!"

BECAUSE, in another of those hilarious items about TV ratings that EVERYONE loves, we had mentioned the ongoing proliferation of drive-by shootings up there.

"Is it supposed to be kept a secret?" we asked each of the ladies.

"I DON'T know," replied the crabby one, "but there haven't been any shootings on MY street here, so you've given Salinas an undeserved bad name by bringing it up."

HALO D'VINCENT has blown the lid off a Missouri puppy mill and chased an attacking grizzly bear into an Alaskan wood, clad only in a hooded blue raincoat — Halo, not the bear.

Too strange to be true? Surely you cannot doubt the veracity of this appealing 3-year-old white fluffy Bichon Frise who resides in Carmel Valley with her mom, Cynthia, and who runs on Carmel Beach frequently, her curly ears flowing back gracefully in the salty air — Halo's, not her mom's.

Halo was purchased unwittingly from a Sacramento dealer — who later turned out to be the evil agent of an out-of-state puppy mill. She was so small she fit comfortably into her new Mom's hand as she was carried home. Once there, she fell into a coma and was rushed to a vet who diagnosed her as having two life-threatening diseases. Halo was placed immediately in intensive care and nursed to good health.

Halo's mom alerted a Sacramento TV news station to the tiny pup's deplorable condition due to her unwholesome beginnings; the news team instigated an investigation, tracked down the ring leader in Missouri and subsequently had the illegal puppy mill operation closed down.

How a raincoat-clad Halo chased a bear into the Alaskan woods and staved off a near disaster is another story for another time.

Sweet tea, possum and fiddleheads

'However, I must also report that nation-wide, Carmel is not remembered for its fine restaurants or even for its breathtaking scenery. Instead, I am continually asked, "Isn't that where Clint Eastwood is mayor?"'

MY GRANDPARENTS did it. Heroines in novels did it, as well as socialites and celebrities. They all took the Grand Tour of Europe. Their photos were snapped beside the Eiffel Tower, in Venetian gondolas and in Swiss chalets. They arrived aboard luxury liners, having frittered away the mornings on deck chaises, under fringed lap-robes, holding mugs of hot bouillon — an 11 o'clock custom while at sea.

They toured the Continent with monogrammed steamer trunks containing evening clothes, tea dresses, morning suits, garden hats, dove-gray spats and white kid gloves. They had come to see, to be seen, and of course, to eat. This sort of travel was a very glamorous pursuit. But why, then, don't we invest touring our own continent with the same aura of luxury?

As I write this, I can report that I am 12 weeks into my Grand Tour of the United States in my 17-foot Toyota camper. I have seen the sights and sampled the best and the worst of the regional cuisines.

I am lucky when it comes to food. To me it's all good, except for the stuff that's excellent. And I like a range of foods, from Sausage Egg McMuffins and the Colonel's Crusty Chicken Livers to any of the exquisite offerings at Taste in Pacific Grove, currently my favorite restaurant.

I will admit, however, to two things on which I am not keen. The first is cod tongues, which I sampled only once while touring Nova Scotia. I tossed the gushy, fishy, so-called delicacy out the back door of my camper. The other is poi, that grayish-lavender sludge pounded from the taro root, which I will decline should I ever find myself at another Hawaiian luau.

Boiled yak, Vegemite

I've eaten boiled yak while trekking in Nepal, and had stewed ostrich in a lumpy gravy while in South Africa. I even became a fan of Vegemite, a brown gooey spread made from yeast that a staple in New Zealand, when I visited there 20 years ago with photographer Cole Weston. I put it on my toast in the mornings, in lieu of marmalade, and have discovered that I can count on a steady supply from Star Market in Salinas.

Like the rest of us here on the Monterey Peninsula, I am spoiled rotten when it comes to good food. We have so many excellent restaurants to choose from, offering a tremendous variety of fare from around the world. Artichokes, of course, are the reigning specialty. They are available french-fried, steamed, stuffed, hot or cold. Calamari is a new dish for many of our visitors.

However, I must also report that nation-wide, Carmel is not remembered for its fine restaurants or even for its breathtaking scenery. Instead, I am continually asked, "Isn't that where Clint Eastwood is mayor?"

Into the heartland

Sashaying across the U.S., I have journeyed into the heartland, sampling and tasting all the way. Since I was traveling solo, I could eat whenever I felt like it. One afternoon, at about tea-time, I was going through the Smoky Mountains of Virginia. I stopped for a dish of boiled turnip greens laced with vinegar, which was accompanied by a southern biscuit. Another afternoon snack in Arizona consisted of Apache Frybread, drizzled with honey and powdered sugar — which I found similar to the Pennsylvania Dutch Funnel Cake — not unlike the Fried Dough which is peddled on the banks of the River Charles in Boston. Good dishes tend to get around, and a deep-fried dessert by any other name will taste as sweet.

In Oklahoma, I ate roadside corn-on-the-cob. Until faced with this savory tidbit, dripping as it was with melted butter and furiously salted, I had considered those little plastic corn holder thumbtack things a waste of time. In hot, humid Florida, I had the choice of ordering plain iced tea or sweet tea. Sweet tea, already sugared as the name suggests, is prevalent throughout the southern states.

Sausage Gravy over Biscuits was available for breakfast at McDonald's in Asheville, N.C. The young employee was amazed when I told him that I had never seen this offered at any other Mickey D's. To which he stammered, "but this is a franchise!" I didn't have time to remark that I knew McDonald's in Guam serves rice, or that in Paris a Big Mac is a Cheeseburger Royale, before he said, "Where you from, anyway?" When I told him I hailed from Carmel, California, he asked THE question... "Isn't Clint Eastwood y'all's mayor?'"

Johnny Cakes

I sampled a better version of what is usually named biscuits and gravy, and of course grits, at the lavish breakfast buffet of North Carolina's Brasstown Valley Resort. My dining companion was a very handsome man to whom I'd been introduced by my brother. I tried johnny cakes in Rhode Island, which I learned were originally called "journey cakes." In the old days, these flapjack-style quick breads were stacked up, wrapped in a bandana, and pocketed to be eaten while en route to elsewhere. They are still preferred to hash browns in much of New England, but purists argue over the proper ingredients. Rhode Islanders say they should be concocted from cornmeal and milk, but those closer to Boston insist that the liquid should be water.

I've always liked scrapple, popular in the Philadelphia area as a breakfast meat. This is a paté-like combination of sausage and cornmeal which is sliced and fried. I like it best crumbled into soft-boiled eggs.

Cold peach cider in Georgia, where gas was the cheapest in the country (98 cents a gallon), was refreshing. But boiled peanuts, another specialty throughout the region, didn't strike my fancy. These are prepared by boiling the unshelled peanuts for six hours in salt water, until the nuts themselves attain the consistency of, well... let me just say that if you like cod tongues and poi, you'll love these.

Although I acquired a bumper sticker which reads: "Possum: The other other white meat," I didn't get the chance to sample any while driving through Tennessee. However, I was assured that possum is greasy, and the old folks still eat it on occasion.

Desserts I usually pass on, especially since my small camper isn't equipped with a scale to curb my extravagances. I did have a slice of excellent Key Lime pie in Cincinnati at ZZ Pizza Company, while dining with an old beau.

While celebrating my 40th reunion at the Masters School in Dobbs Ferry, N.Y., I was offered, among other selections in a large luncheon buffet, a steak salad. The school chef, Robert Orellann, happily provided me with the recipe for this unusual and flavorful dish. It appears below with that for the Key Lime pie.

Fiddlehead greens

As I was grocery shopping one morning in Manchester, Vermont, I happened upon a bin of fiddlehead greens, a springtime offering which has recently made the transition from rural mainstay to sought-after yuppie delicacy. While picking through the lot to find the smallest and tenderest, I was bracketed by two little old ladies dressed from head to toe in L.L. Beans' finest.

"What does one do with those cute little green things?" one of them asked me. I explained that they should be sauteed with onions and garlic — about three minutes is the optimal cooking time — then tossed with pasta, other vegetables, or a green salad.

The silver-haired ladies thanked me, smiling, before each timidly scooped a handful of the shepherd's crook-shaped ferns into her plastic bag. One of them asked where I was from, and you can guess the ensuing dialogue.

Soft-shell crabs

Seafood is available throughout the country, but I waited until I reached the coast before I partook. The sauteed soft-shell crabs which I had on the Eastern shore of Maryland were as good as those I'd had at "21" in New York City. Uncle Charles, up from Texas, took me to a fish restaurant on New York's Staten Island. The scallops and shrimp were passable, but the deep-fried sliced portabello mushrooms were as memorable as the view of the shipping channel with its backdrop of the Manhattan skyline.

I stopped to see my college roommate on Rhode Island's Narragansett Bay. I immediately went down to gather mussels and periwinkles at low tide, which I steamed in a splash of white wine and served them as hors d'oeuvres with a lemony mayonnaise thinned with some of the cooking broth. Toothpicks are required for the snails.

In Maine, a bunch of us went out for batches of plump fried clams and one-and-a-quarter pound lobsters. Locals will tell you that this is the ideal weight for what my brother refers to as the Flamenco dancers of the sea, all named, according to him, "Julio Crustacean." A one-pounder just isn't big enough, but by the time they reach a pound and a half, they're starting to get stringy. And, as any Mainiac will tell you, Julio should be boiled for 12 minutes, exactly, in seawater.

The farther "Down East" you venture, the more likely it is that you'll find malt vinegar mixed into your melted butter than what most of us consider the traditional lemon juice. The sour stuff also replaces ketchup on French Fries here, as it does throughout nearby Canada.

Those Mainers certainly have a way with shellfish. While teaching a ladies' sailing course at WoodenBoat school in Brooklin, I was treated one night to a memorable chowder, crammed with enough clams, mussels and other frutti di mare that you could have walked on the stuff.

One night earlier in the summer, while the first hurricane of the season tickled the Virginia coast with rain and wind, I bought two dozen shrimp, boiled them over my camper's propane stove, and indulged while finishing up a friend's copy of "Into Thin Air," Jon Krakauer's personal account of the 1996 assault on Everest which ended in tragedy. Gorging on the shrimp, I was delighted not to be outside in the night's storm, not to mention Everest.

The evening of the fourth of July I spent with close friends on a terrace overlooking Saugatuck Bay in Westport, Conn. We ate steamers, mussels, oysters and corn-on-the-cob with frosty slices of watermelon for dessert. While the stars came out, along with the no-see-ums, an array of fireworks glittered overhead.

Jeffers Festival embraces music, seminar, walk and banquet

■ Tribute to Jeffers and Sterling's lyric genius to be heralded in music

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

THREE VANCOUVER, British Columbians — all eminent in the field of music and all with an abiding interest in poetry — will travel to Carmel-by-the-Sea next week to present a musical program. "The Lyric Genius of Robinson Jeffers and George Sterling" begins at 8 p.m. Friday, Oct. 10 at The Church of the Wayfarer, Lincoln at Seventh.

The program commences a weekend of music, seminars, a walk and a gala banquet commemorating Carmel's world-acclaimed poet during the 1997 Robinson Jeffers Festival.

"Divine Immanence" is the title chosen by composer Elliot Weisgarber for his musical settings of poems by Jeffers and Sterling to be presented Friday evening when soprano Erica Northcott and pianist Rena Sharon will perform. Weisgarber and Sharon will comment on the poems and the ancient relationship of music and poetry.

"Omnia Exeunt in Misterium," a song cycle adapted from the orchestral score by composer Weisgarber — a tribute to George Sterling — will be presented, as will seven poems by Jeffers.

Two new Jeffers settings by Weisgarber, "Divine Immanence," will include "Gray landmarks of an end," and "Tor house."

Saturday seminars

Two George White Memorial Seminars, moderated by Maureen Girard, will take place at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 11 in Carpenter Hall at Sunset Cultural Center, Mission Street. "The Friendship of Robinson Jeffers and George Sterling" is the topic pursued by Richard Kohlman Hughey at the 10 to noon session. This will include David Rothman speaking on "Jeffers, Longfellow and Narrative Tradition in American Poetry."

At the afternoon seminars from 2 to 4, moderated by John Courtney, producer/cinematographer David Myers and poet/playwright/consultant James Schevill will present a talk, "On Filming the Documentary, 'Give Your Heart to the Hawks,'" which was made for PBS viewing; while editor/authors Robert Kafka and Boone Hughey will discuss, "Search for Lonely Rock: East Fork, Ventana Creek."

Advance reservations for combined Saturday seminars, morning and afternoon, are $10 per person. Single session admission is $8 at the door.

Evening gala banquet

Leon Panetta will be honored for his contributions to environmental preservation and toward creating the Monterey Bay Marine Sanctuary at Saturday evening's annual Jeffers banquet. It starts at 7:30 p.m. on Oct. 11 at the Mission Inn, Rio Road, east of Highway 1.

Poet and playwright James Schevill will present "Robinson Jeffers: A Reading" during the ceremonies which commence at 9 p.m., and Bradford Buckminster will receive docent honors.

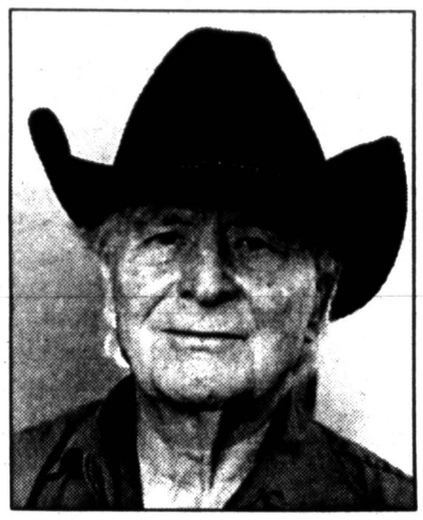
Seating is limited and is by advance reservations only at $65.

Sunday Jeffers Walk

The Jeffers weekend concludes with the annual Jeffers Poetry walk led this year by John Courtney and former Carmel Mayor Jean Grace.

Those wishing to participate are asked to gather at 8:30 a.m. for coffee and cakes in Room 14-A Sunset Center between Eighth and Ninth Avenues on the Mission Street. The walk will commence at 9:15. Participants are asked to bring favorite poems and a brown bag lunch for a beach picnic at noon. There is no fee for this event.

A special festival package at $75 per person is available and provides admission to all festival events. For information and reservations, call 624-1813 or fax 624-3696.



DAVID MYERS, producer of the PBS Robinson Jeffers documentary, "Give Your Heart to the Hawks," will speak on its filming with James Schevill, the film's writer/consultant who is a former professor, a poet and winner of the Literary Award of the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters. Myers has been the director of photography and cinematographer on numerous music features, documentaries and theatrical features.

Torch songs of love performed at La Mirada

THE MONTEREY Museum of Art at La Mirada features the story of love discovered, love lost and love renewed through the songs of Gershwin, Porter, Ellington and other greats. These will be performed by the torch song trio, Stephanie Waldroup and Keith Wolhart, vocalists, and Melinda Coffey, pianist.

The event is set 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. Sunday. This ongoing "First Sunday" highlights classical and other types of music, along with the opportunity to stroll through the galleries and gardens with over 85 varieties of roses and other flowers.

Docents are available to interpret the exhibits. Reservations are not necessary. Light refreshments and wine will be available for purchase, with a $3 per person donation requested. The Museum Store will be open. Some seating available on a first-come, first-served basis. The "First Sunday" events are sponsored by Merrill Lynch.

OUR GENTLE GIANT
Elegy for Kris Olinger
Oct. 2, 1979 - Sept. 19, 1997

I received the call
From a beloved friend
I need a favor he says
I need you to write me a poem
My son...

Blue skies, summer's gentle breath
Softly rustles through the leaves
Outside my window
And I think to myself
This day is far too beautiful
To bear such bad news

They called him the gentle giant
Strapping young man
Big beyond his seventeen years
His heart even bigger still
His heart — now still...

Strong young man fallen
At Point Pinos that night
And the waves they crash
Upon Point Pinos tonight
They crash in angry indignation
For the tragic taking of a life
Not yet fully lived
And he had only begun to grow into himself

My own mortality stands silent
In the chilling shadow of his senseless death
Tragedy knows no rhyme nor reason
And we are left to make sense
Not of his death — for that can't be done
But of his life
Of our own lives
Of the transformational nature of love shared
And the effect we can have
When we truly care for our brethren

God be with you, Kris
You left us well loved.

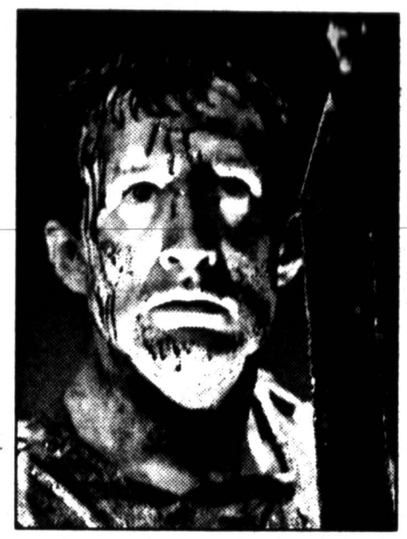
THEATER REVIEW

'CORIOLANUS' — A PLAY FOR ALL TIMES

By PATRICK WHITEHURST

WHEN A cast is so obviously enamored of a play and enthusiastic about the characters they assume you know the performance will be a success. And it was!

"Coriolanus," the season's final Shakespearian presentation by Pacific Repertory Theatre, is closing the season with a bang and leaving us fulfilled, entertained, and a little bit sad that summer evenings at the old Forest Theatre are coming to an end.



Stephen Moorer as Coriolanus ... 'arrogrant election speeches'

We are greeted by Steve Judge's marvelous set design for a public place in Rome of which we are a part. Players come from the shadows of the theater to take their places on stage.

The content of "Coriolanus" is almost entirely political, and its interest concentrated upon the character of its chief protagonist. Actually there are two protagonists in the large cast the play requires — Coriolanus, and the People. The dramatic conflict is essentially between him and them.

Stephen Moorer as Coriolanus displays his fine Shakespearian talent and his obvious life-long love of the works of the Bard of Avon in this presentation.

That a play written in 1580 about an event in the Rome of 499 can relate to civil and social conflicts in the world of the 1990s is perhaps a reason for its long enduring quality.

Political cross to bear

These issues start off the very first scene. The citizens are mutinying against the governing class — so here we have a modern theme, that of class-conflict and a theme that concerned Shakespeare personally. As a landowner in Warwickshire he had his own political cross to bear, particularly as a citizen with a considerable store of corn malt subject to severe Elizabethan Poor Law statutes. It was a theme that his audience could then relate to and one that has been with us from then until now — therefore its great universality.

The corporate wisdom of the people speaks through the First Citizen; they regard "Coriolanus" as their chief enemy . . . "Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price."

And we're up and away in a raucous, bloody, dramatic conflict and some exciting fight scenes skillfully choreographed by Bob Borwick.

Every time Coriolanus opens his mouth to the citizens he puts his foot in it and delivers some pretty arrogant election speeches. Though a hero, his fatal pride makes him a lousy politician and candidate for consul.

His friend, the patrician Menenius, played to perfection by Michael Jacobs, does his best to explain the facts of life to the plebeians (nothing can be done about unemployment and taxes) and at the same time tries to council Coriolanus, who takes no one's advice, even his dear mother's, Volumnia, played with compassion by Marcia Hovick. One feels the beauty and strength of this stern Roman matron and realizes that it was probably her fault that Coriolanus turned into the psychotic character that he was.

Political demagogues in the two excellently portrayed parts of the tribunes, Brutus (Brian Linden) and Sicinus (Jack Halton) have no difficulty in stirring up the people and driving Coriolanus to say what he really thinks of the state of affairs in Rome and its citizens. It didn't work then and it doesn't work now: Any politician who tells people home-truths always seems to alienate himself and be driven into exile, even as Coriolanus was.

The scene in which, disguised, he enters the house of his arch enemy and opponent, Aufidius, and is embraced by him, is one of the finest of many fine scenes in this play. Paul Jennings as Affidius takes on this difficult and unsympathetic role and plays it with conviction.

There were far too many noteworthy performances by the Repertory group to be singled out here but every member of the large featured cast (14 in all) and the entire ensemble (19 members) helped achieve an outstanding presentation and are to complimented.

Costuming by Rhonda Griffith filled the stage with authenticity and vibrant color and was brought to life by Ed Hills' sensitive lighting design.

As the play progressed I surreptitiously looked around at the appreciative audience and noticed that, as if on cue, they leaned forward in their seats whenever the action on stage became intense or tempestuous and then, with an almost audible sigh of relief as action subsided, returned to their more relaxed attitude.

I could almost hear Technical Director, John Rousseau, whisper from the wings, "Gotcha!"

And he did.

Rare Finds on the Peninsula

European Galleries

Newly opened in downtown Carmel, European Galleries displays one-of-a-kind paintings by artists from the 1880s to the present.

Vladimir Simich owns the intimate gallery, and it is managed by Judy Bronstein.

Simich works directly with artists in France, Russia and other European venues. This makes the prices for these originals surprisingly affordable.

European Galleries also features museum-quality works, such as the pair of oils by Eugene Laloue. Painted circa 1881, these canvases depict the French towns of St. Malo and Dieppe in bygone times. Simich purchased them from the family who acquired them from Laloue himself.

The gallery, located on San Carlos between Fifth and Sixth, is a place where no one need feel intimidated by the artwork. Its walls beckon visitors daily, with views of Parisian street scenes, European gardens, and the light-diffused South of France.

To learn more, call 624-2010.

Sand Castles-by-the-Sea

Fans of our Peninsula's exceptional toy store, SandCastles-by-the-Sea, will be glad to learn that it has moved to a new location in Carmel's Barnyard and doubled in size.

Look for the airy new SandCastles on the corner across from Rainbow Scent Co. in the plaza at the Barnyard.

You'll find an even greater selection of classic toys that inspire children to engage in active play. Owner Delana Leone-Pierce has gathered a wealth of toys from Europe, as well as handcrafted, one-of-a-kind pieces and expanded the dress-up corner just in time for Trick or Treat.

SandCastles-by-the-Sea is the place to find a pirate ship, a treasure chest filled with golden doubloons, a fairy tree house, and child-sized real musical instruments, from steel drums to baby grand pianos.

The shop is open now, but the grand reopening celebration will take place 10 to 3 on Oct. 18. Register for a drawing to win a $100 gift certificate, $50 gift certificate, or a Beanie Baby called "Garcia."

SandCastles-by-the-Sea is open daily. Call 626-8361.

CareProviders, Victorian Home Care, Inc.

Offering individuals in-home care as needed, from two hours a day to around-the-clock, is the mission of CareProviders, Victorian Home Care, Inc.

Harry Townsend designs Carmel souvenir plate

LINE DRAWINGS of typical Carmel landmarks — including a Comstock house — decorate a Carmel souvenir plate designed by Carmel Valley's Harry Townsend, store planner and visual merchandiser. Produced in full color, the plate is 9 1/2" in diameter and is now available in local stores.

Townsend says, "It's a timeless piece. It could have been made 50 years ago because there are no indications of today's Carmel."

Answers to this week's puzzle page 8B

JOE FITZPATRICK...

The polite one suggested the mere mention of drive-by shootings may give some people the idea that all of Salinas is a dangerous place, even to visit.

PERISH the thought! Nothing could be further from the truth. Salinas is a perfectly safe place to be any time! (As long as you don't wander into one of the shooting gallery areas by mistake. But hey, you probably won't.)

P.S. — The real item there may be that at least two Salinas ladies read the Pine Cone!

TODAY'S QUOTE . . . Alan Ray:

"Saturdays at the stadium are a big deal to football players at some prominent universities — it's the one day of the week they're actually on campus."

(But what possible reason would they have for being on the campuses at Lincoln, Miami, Tallahassee, etc., during the rest of the week?)

"Look, Mom, it's the Nutty Professor!"

Pat (later) — "That settles it. I'm going on a diet, for sure!"

REMEMBER good old Gene Hammond? Sure you do. He was on the Carmel Planning Commission in 1974-75 and again in 1984-85, and was elected to the City Council in 1976.

He also served for six months in the latter year as Carmel's mayor.

ANYWAY, Gene and his wife, Dorrie, moved away in 1988 to the toasty desert climes of Borrego Springs, located well south of Palm Springs and a bit west of the Salton Sea, for her health.

They built a house there and greatly enjoyed the desert from Octobers through Aprils, and survived it in the summer months — thanks to 24-hour air conditioning! But Dorrie died last March, and the magic went out of it for Gene.

NOW he has just returned to the Monterey Peninsula and is again making his home in Carmel!

One mystery still intrigues him about Borrego Springs — how hot does it actually get on July and August afternoons there?

"WE and our neighbors only had thermometers that went up to 120 degrees," he said, "but it always got THAT high by early afternoon, so we were never able to tell how much hotter it was in mid- and late afternoon!"

Gee, it sounds like old Gene may possibly be in shape to take in 20 or 30 minutes of the next Gilroy Garlic Festival!

(Peter Ciccarelli, the west's — and maybe the world's — most imaginative flack, who creates publicity for the festival, will have my head on a platter for that remark!)

WONDERFUL ,Very Berkeley sign spotted by Maria Russell in a Berkeley shop window on Telegraph Avenue:

"Positively No Solicitors of Any Kind Whatsoever (except for the peanut brittle man)."

BOUQUETS are in order for Jan and Lori Zobler, whose Cornucopia Market in the Carmel Rancho area was selected by Health Foods Business magazine as "1997 Store of the Year" in its size category!

The 5,600 sq. ft. market was judged No. 1 among all stores of 3,000 to 8,000 sq. ft.

CORNUCOPIA was founded by the Zoblers 21 years ago, and moved into its present expanded location three years ago.

I say this calls for tofu floats in soybean oil for everyone in the house!

(Better skip me, though — I'm driving.)

MILESTONES . . . Did you remember last Sunday (Sept. 28) was KION news anchor Karina Rusk's 35th birthday?

If not, do not fret. Both Stahl Motors and Monterey Jaguar are open until 6 p.m. today, and both have appropriate belated birthday gifts from which to choose.

AND believe it or not, yesterday was the 29th anniversary of the birth of the Sardine Factory restaurant in Monterey on Oct. 2, 1968!

Ted Balestreri and Bert Cutino could never have dreamed that that would mark Day One in their meteoric careers! Congratulations to both.

ROMNEY Dunbar, a staple on television news programs around here for 14 years, anchored his au revoir program on KSBW last Monday.

Romney and his wife, Priscilla, will take a hiatus from the daily grind — driving leisurely cross-country to Boston and wherever else intrigues them, then back west again to West Yellowstone (where he came from) for skiing and relaxing with his parents.

AFTER that, and only after that, will they consider where, how and with whom they will return to gainful employment!

May the force be with them! (No, not the cops, silly.)

AS mentioned here once before, Romney is the only news anchor to have worked for all three English language TV stations in this area — KSBW, KION (which was KMST when he was there), and KCBA — and was never fired by any of them!

INCIDENTAL INTELLIGENCE . . . Former Peninsulan Leah McGuire, who now lives in Baltimore, forwards a clipping from The Sun there revealing the following vignette:

The Washington Post had reported that social critic James Carville, in commenting on the Paula Jones sexual harassment suit against President Clinton, had called Ms. Jones "trailer park trash."

A FEW days later, Carville received a hot letter of complaint from the Maryland Mobile Homeowners' Assn. objecting to his linking Jones with anything having to do with mobile homes!

You have to remember, today everything is sacred.

FINALLY . . . Uh, doesn't that private school around these parts get suspicious at all when it sees a kid, who is there on a "financial hardship scholarship," driving his own Porsche to school every day?

Or is the "hardship" based on the fact his wealthy family won't let him have a Ferrari instead of that mundane Porsche?

Only asking.

BE KIND to your weekend.

Are you sick of having your carpets so-called "cleaned" when within only a few weeks the spots and traffic areas reappear? For the past 48 years that has been the cry of hundreds of homeowners who have been left bewildered. Russell's plea continues - have you a Leica in your closet? Or an early Nikon, Canon, Hasselblad, Linhof or Contax? These cameras are very much in need, so you'd be wise to check out your closets, attics, basements, call your grandparents, parents, older brother or sister and just see if a pre-1971 camera might still be around catching dust. Russell Levin of the LEVIN GALLERY wants to buy certain early cameras and will gladly pay hundreds, even thousands for the right one. Call him at 649-1166 if you find one and he'll tell you what it's worth over the phone. 408 Calle Principal, Monterey.

CHOMP offers classes of great interest. Here are two: "Begin & Win", a program of exercise walking geared for novice exercisers and "Living a Healthy Life with Chronic Conditions". Call 625-4708 for more information.

Chili Cookoff Judges Jeff Frye, Wendy Brody, Josie Diaz, Randy Randazzo and Bob Bussinger decide the chili champions.

GREAT BOWLS OF FIRE! Chili Cook-off inflames Valley

THE CARMEL Valley Chamber of Commerce Fourth Annual "Great Bowls of Fire!" Chili Cook-off took place Sept. 22 at the Holman Ranch in Carmel Valley.

Call me prejudiced — I don't care! As a firm advocate of nepotism and an undeclared judge, I state that the chili "Roadkill," cooked by Carmel Pine Cone staffers Gilda Soulé, Patti Saunders and Tim Cadigan was the best. Nepotism aside, their entry was truly delicious because the large pieces of beef simmered for hours, making the chili melt in your mouth.

Social Spotlight

By Dodie Barkley

But, let's hear it for the others: the one called "Screaming Hot," cooked by the Running Iron Restaurant and the Carmel Valley Market and an entry named "Cabo-Wabo Chilli!" I loved the Carmel Volunteer Fire Department's "Hog-Wild Chili" too, which won first prize. It was filled with wild boar sausage which, in this gourmand's mind, can't be topped anywhere in the world!

Celebrity judges (crooks who take bribes —I know this because I was a judge once) — Wendy Brodie, Bob Bussinger, Josie Diaz, Jeff Frye, Cathi Fox and Randy Randazzo, gave out prizes for Best Amateur and Professional Chili, Best Decorated Table and The Peoples' Choice, while the biggest crowd ever — more than 300 people, sampled the delicious hot chili. I spied Shane and Stewart Fuller, Kay Kirkland and Ann Olivier and all the gals from the chamber working hard there.

Hostess, Holman Ranch owner Dorothy McEwen, together with Chamber President Pam Norton, made sure that everyone was seated in the wonderful rose-scented patio, where delicious salads and libations were offered. Inside the old western-styled theater waited silent auction items galore, donated from just about every vineyard in the county, as well as restaurants, shopping centers and banks. All of the funds benefited the chamber.

When the Cachagua Playboys started their marvelous western-style music, all there were stompin' their feet to the fast and furious music!

Dorothy McEwen, chili hostess and Holman Ranch owner, straddles a bull seat while CVCC president Pat Norton holds on for dear life during the "Great Bowls of Fire" chili cookoff.

At the entrance to the cookoff waited a nifty-looking 1973 Mercedes Benz SL-540 convertible, which was donated by Peter Coakley. At $100 a ticket, a lucky winner will capture the car at the Monte Carlo Night bash on Oct. 25 in Carmel Valley. The funds will go directly to the Help Our Park Fund (HOP) in Carmel Valley.

This year's chili cookoff was truly a blazing hot success!

■ Sun shines for Barnyard's Eighth Art and Wine Festival

"What is it about a tiny taste of wine together with a small wedge of cheese that sends you to Nirvana?" I asked a gentlemen wearing a delightful straw boater, who stood ahead of me in line at one of the tasting booths at the Barnyard's Eighth Annual Art and Wine Festival.

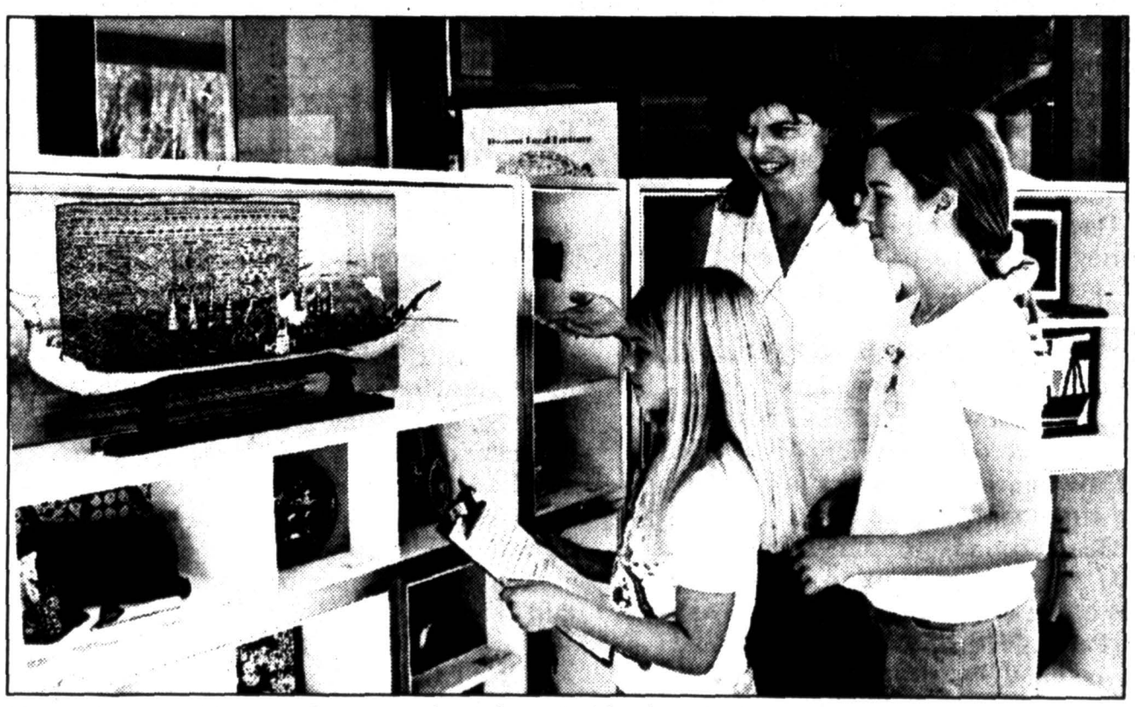
"Isn't it grand — a lovely warm day, flowers and this?" he answered, nodding his head, and adding, "I think the acidity of the wine blends well with the mellow taste of cheese."

I agreed and continued moseying amongst the loveliest gathering of artists, flowers and shops there is on the peninsula.

The Barnyard, with balloons aloft and large posters advertising Saturday's event, was awash in visitors. And one very intelligent, beautiful black Labrador retriever, wearing an emerald green collar emblazoned with green jewels, knew where all the best appetizers were.

It was wonderful to be able to walk into artist's studios and chat. Mary Titus, her large canvasses filled with animals, was a delight to watch. She indicated that she had sold a few paintings.

Pianist Jonathan Lee played his soft, lyrical ballads as people found shady spots



Young Marissa Houston-Carico with Melissa Pickford and Alex Houston-Carico gaze at the items that the Museum on Wheels displayed at the Barnyard Art and Wine Festival Saturday.

SOCIAL EVENTS

to sit down and savor the foods and wines.

I always look forward to the Barnyard festivals and will return in '98.

■ Monterey Bay Republican Women Federated assemble for annual dinner

The stars that night were big and bright at the Elks Lodge in Monterey, where on Sept. 20 the Monterey Bay Republican Women Federated welcomed many guests to their annual dinner.

In a related aside, you may ask, "What is Terminal Velocity (TV)?" TV is what happens to free-flyers, those parachuted souls who jump from planes. At first, they accelerate wildly as they drop. Then, they fall at a constant rate of speed called Terminal Velocity. More later — trust me on this.

The dinner boasted silent and live auctions replete with golf packages, dinners, furniture, a wine-filled wheelbarrow, sailing on the bay plus more than 40 other donated items.

State Senator and Master of Ceremonies Bruce McPherson welcomed Assemblyman Peter Frusetta; Republican Bill McCampbell, a declared candidate against Democrat Sam Farr; U.S. Congressman. Marc Del Piero, board member of the State Water Resources Control Board; Louis Calcagno, ex-officio of the California Coastal Commission, who is running for the Monterey County Supervisorial seat in the Third District, and many others at that oh-so-lively bash.

During a delicious steak dinner, all of the above spoke briefly, mainly to ask friends to present a strong front at the voting booths next year. Bill McCampbell's described a humorous, but frustrating, confrontation with Pat Keil, publisher of the Monterey County Herald, wherein he tried to place an ad that equated Farr's acceptance of PAC money with "bribes." The ad ran, but both parties agreed to cross out the word "bribe" and let the readers fill in the blanks.

Frank Conte sang the national anthem and President Peggy Shirrel introduced the guest speaker, James McCormick.

McCormick, a professional sky-diver, showed gorgeous pictures of sky-divers looking like angels soaring about the universe. His speech, "How to Exceed Terminal Velocity," dealt with how to overcome fear before jumping out of a plane. It was indeed apropos at that Republican fundraiser. I watched the politicians' faces as they tried to inculcate the symbolism of the speaker's brave words into their own fearful political battles.

Chairperson Ann Troia, Shirleymae Conte and hostess Beverly Cook, were applauded for making the dinner a very distinctive one indeed.

■ MIRA looks to the stars

"Man's a lonely beast, always looking to the universe for answers."

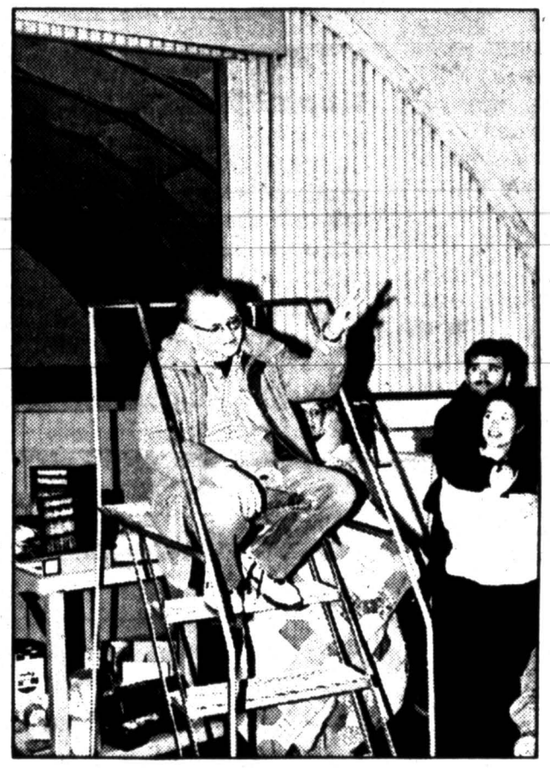
— Paul Gauguin

No symphony, no poem, no work of art can compare to the stars that brighten our heavens with their grand designs.

That's why I didn't mind driving the last six miles of that hellish road to Chews Ridge to attend the special star party sponsored by the Friends of the Monterey Institute for Research in Astronomy (MIRA). Last Saturday evening, 40 of us caught a glimpse of the universe through MIRA's 36-inch research telescope, poised 4,000 feet above the valley.

Even though it was cold out and we had to climb a few flights of stairs to get to the telescope, the feeling was akin to what someone on the moon might experience when he sees the earth rise for the first time. Indescribable! Those who kept expecting more, got it!

Laura Cohan, administrator of MIRA, introduced Gordon Jones, chairman of the board of directors; Dr. Craig Chester, astronomer and one of the founders of MIRA; and Dr. Bruce Weaver, president, astronomer and founder of MIRA. Chester called Weaver a prestigious scientist who attended several astronomy lectures worldwide from Japan to Washington, D.C. this year.



Bruce Weaver, astronomer and founder/president of MIRA, lectures at the star party.

Weaver spoke as we watched the bright orange sun set in the west and the skies darken. Mentioning that the telescope is a research telescope, Weaver explained that it works on solar power, a windmill and generators. He stated further that the atmospheric conditions on Chews Ridge are perfect for telescopes. Using laymen's terms, he discussed binary stars, nebulae, clusters and galaxies that MIRA researches. "Oh, let's look at a star directly above us," he said, calling the star "Vega."

We did and it was the thrilling.

Several amateur and professional people came and set up their telescopes; some took astral photographs, and many camped overnight there.

Next time, I'm going to camp there too.

For more information about MIRA, call 883-1000.

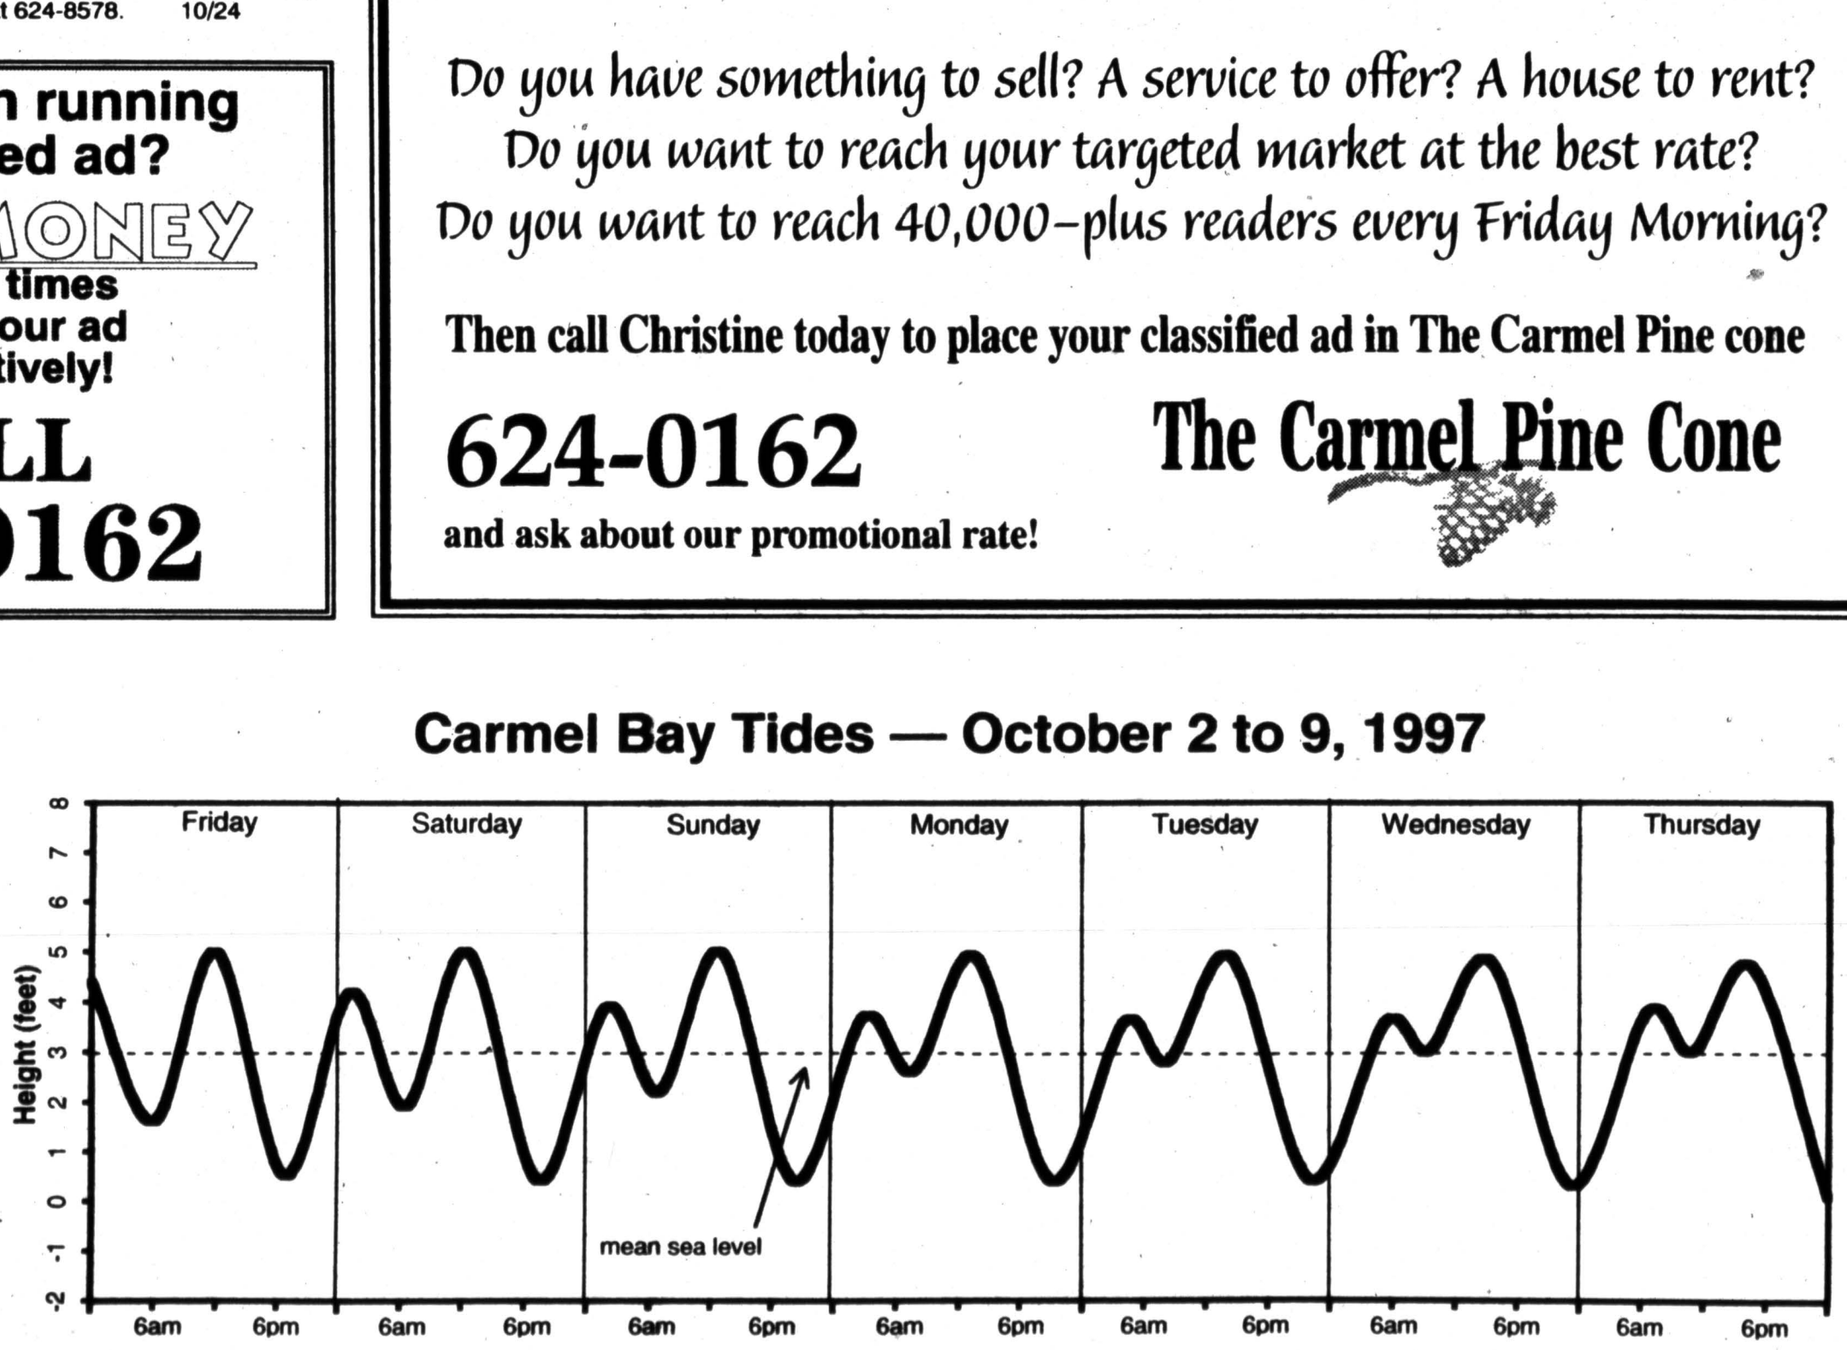
Carmel Bay Tides — October 2 to 9, 1997



- Use this chart to help plan your activities along our incomparable coastline. For example, a sunset campfire at the beach is best planned when there will not be a high tide during the evening hours. Very low tides (especially those below the zero level) provide the best opportunity to explore local tide pools. Fishing is said to be best on days when the tidal variation is greatest. And don't forget that coastal flooding and erosion can be severe when a very high tide coincides with a major storm.
- Tides are primarily caused by the pull of the moon and the sun on earth's oceans. Accordingly, the greatest tides (spring tides) occur when the sun, moon and Earth are aligned (full moon or new moon). When the sun, moon and earth form a right angle tides are smaller (neap tides).
- Every 25 hours there are two high tides and two low tides. "Mean sea level" is the average of all tides and is the same everywhere on the Earth. "Mean high tide" (approximately 4.7 feet on the tide chart) is the average of all local high tides and, in California, is the legal boundary between private coastal lands and publicly-owned tidelands. The zero on tide charts (also called the "datum") is the average of the lower of the low tides that occur in each cycle.
- Chart prepared by The Carmel Pine Cone using data provided by the National Weather Service.

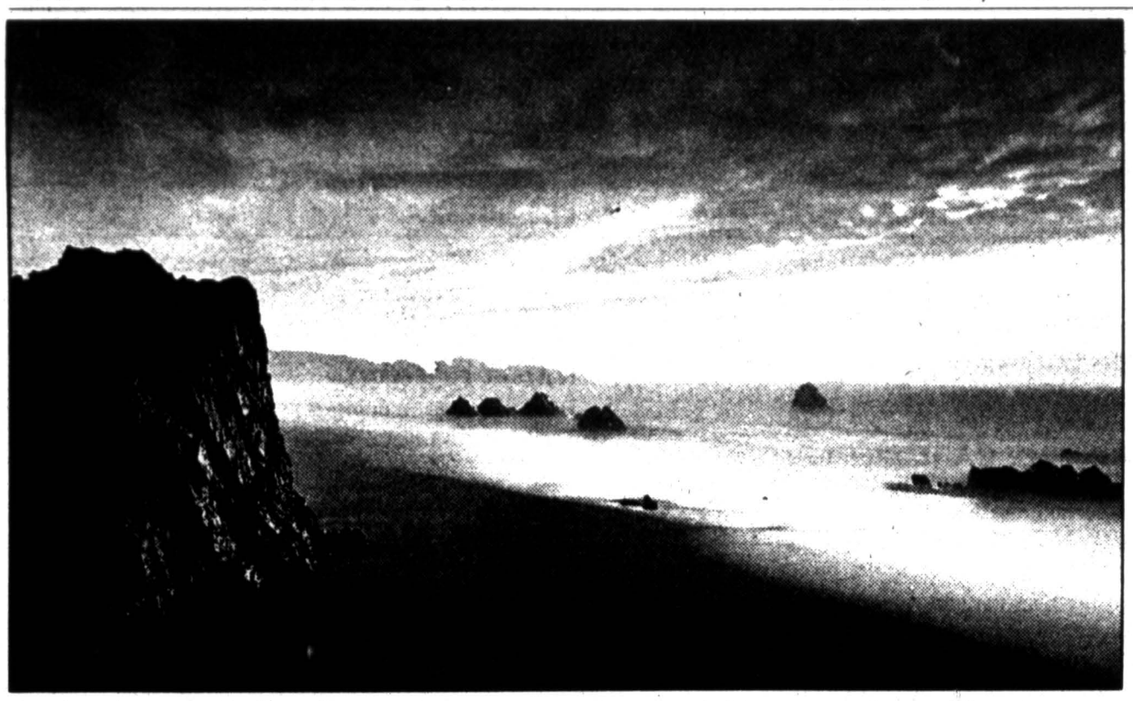
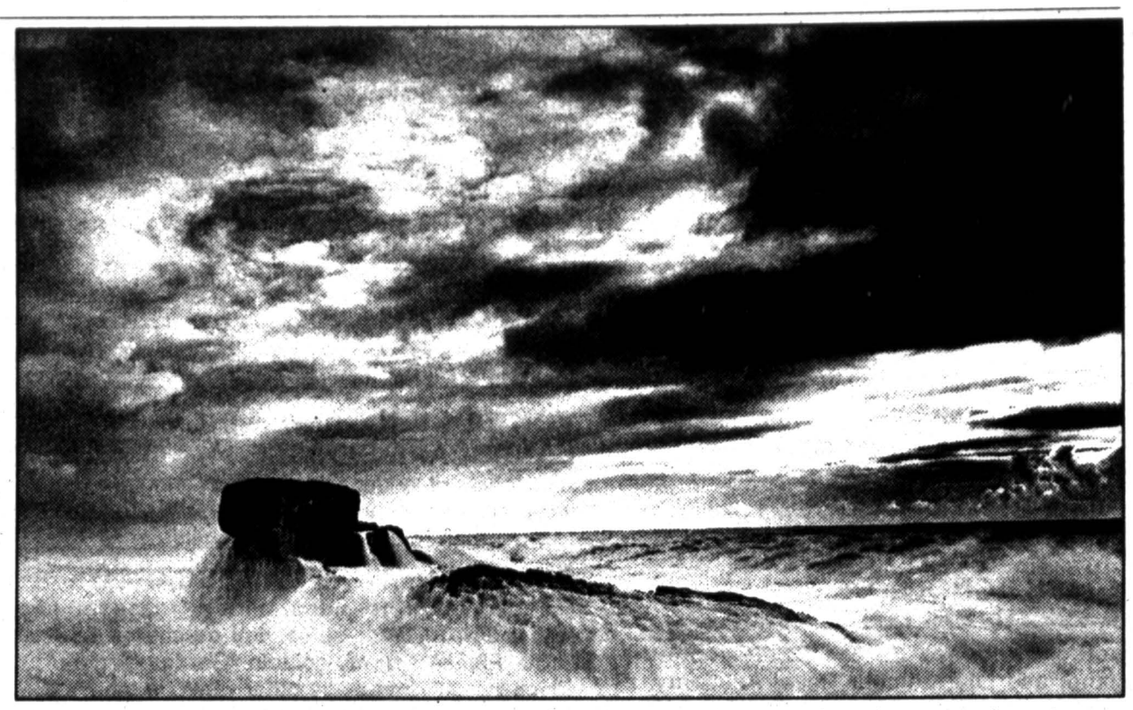
The Carmel Pine Cone



Brad Cole's new book, 'The Last Dream', is populated with haunting images of the Monterey Peninsula.



The volume was published by the Center for Photographic Art, headquartered in Sunset Center, Carmel. Its images date back as far as 1985.

BRAD COLE SEDUCES VIEWERS INTO HIS 'LAST DREAM'

By KIERSTEN MCCUTCHAN

WALT WHITMAN once wrote, "I dream in my dream all the dreams of the other dreamers, and I become the other dreamers."

Whitman's statement — preposterous, eerie, yet somehow true — might also be attributable to one of Carmel's own emerging artists. And artist he is, as his life and his work are intertwined.

For years, Brad Cole thought and planned, recorded, photographed, experimented, charmed and climbed his own threshold of artistic innovation, making him the dreamer of other's dreams. But his dream is now tangible. It's in the form of the 30-something artist's first, and just released, major print endeavor titled "Last Dream." The book is published by Carmel's Center for Photographic Art.

All the "Last Dream" images originated on the Peninsula and date as early as 1985. Cole explains he considers it important to photograph where he lives. After moving from the Los Angeles area 15 years ago, he realizes that this region is special and rare.

"Any subject matter can attract me," he says. "It's not about what's in front of the lens. It has to transcend the subject matter. A person, an artifact or this land usually has a certain resonance for me, and that becomes the basis for my work. It is this internal response that leads me to photograph." And this is also what compelled him to stay in this area.

Dream-like flow

The images in the book, Cole says, are significant because they can stand on their own and also they inspire what he describes as a "dream-like flow." But the dream's identity is ambiguous, he says. "This dream could really be anyone's: my dream, your dream, it could be the last dream of the human race."

> 'I set up the camera and 'expect' the magic to happen. I'm waiting for the grace to come in — the gift.'
> — Brad Cole

And how does Cole form his stark images? He uses a fickle and eccentric 5-by-7-inch view camera and is devoted to the darkroom. His camera is a rarity from the 1930s and offers high resolution, meaning it produces a very sharp image. A negative of this film is the size a human hand. It allows Cole greater definition when working in his darkroom.

His camera is a massive wooden piece of equipment which reveals the image upside down — the photographer is shaded by a cloth. Cole says this more cumbersome and slow photographic process makes him, "Consider what I'm doing."

Cole's artistry culminates in the developing of his own prints. In the photographic world, Cole is recognized as a master printer. He says he would consider having someone else print his work, but has not found anyone who is good enough.

"I'm a perfectionist," he explains. "The darkroom is the biggest part of the process. Sometimes it takes years to get a print right."

The biggest challenge in putting the book together, for Cole, was not the same obstacle many young, unrecognized artists face: Money. Cole was the recipient of a grant from the Center for Photographic Art. The grant was designated especially for his book by two photographic patrons, Austin and Kathleen Barrows, formerly of Pacific Grove.

Cole says the challenge lay in adapting something he originally designed for the screen into book form. The "Last Dream" goes back to a slide show Cole did in 1994 at the Monterey Museum of Art called "Another Room." In that show, Cole combined his images in succession with music and harmonies, motion and editorial judgment. People responded well to this "mini-film," and Cole found that he had discovered his voice. It was that voice and that first eye-opening exhibition that Cole developed into his first book.

Well-rounded

The artist says he thinks of himself as a photographer, filmmaker and finally a kind of self-taught composer. It's when he puts all these things together that he considers his chosen craft well-rounded. The "Last Dream" Cole says, contains all these elements. By finishing the project, Cole says he taught himself how to ascend to some of his theories in his art.

"Sometimes I'll be out all day and not photograph because the worst thing I can do is to force a photograph. Then I'm not getting into the flow of the day to see where my instincts tell me to go — maybe I should be doing something else or be somewhere else. Or just looking, enjoying . . . I set up the camera and 'expect' the magic to happen. I'm waiting for the grace to come in — the gift."

Money from 5K race to go toward preserving six buildable canyon lots

By PAUL WOLF

THE 1,000 or so people taking part in the Third Annual Fine Arts 5K this weekend can pride in the fact that their entry fees will go primarily toward hoped-for land acquisitions on the edge of Pescadero Canyon.

While that fact is good news, the sobering reality is that proceeds from the event will be no more than a drop in the bucket.

Most of the money raised from the event — expected to exceed $10,000 — will be channeled through the Carmel Open Space Task Force, which has declared the rugged greenbelt, zoned for homes, to be its top priority.

In addition to the cause of open space, a small share, $500, is committed to the Mayor's Youth Fund.

"A lot of people don't even know about Pescadero Canyon," observed Karen Ferlito, the task force member in charge of the event's fund raising. "It's not fresh in people's minds in the same way that the beach or Carmel Point are in people's awareness," she said. Ferlito also chairs the Carmel Forest & Beach Commission.

The canyon is located on the north side of town just off narrow Second Avenue. The steep, forested canyon has a small stream running through it most of the year. It straddles the Carmel — Pebble Beach boundary, and has been described as "environmentally sensitive" by a private firm that was hired to interpret state coastal regulations.

Six lots have been eligible for development, and, for many years, three land owners have pushed the city to set the parameters for development, or come up with the money to buy.

One property owner, Kermit Dorius, who owns one lot, has a residential building plan now in process with the city. Story poles for his proposed home are clearly visible from Second Avenue near Casanova.

Park for free?

Jim Winterbotham, broker of Carmel Realty, commented that "it is admirable a citizens' group wants to do something for the property owners, who cannot be expected to provide a park for free."

And the U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly held that property owners must be compensated if they are prohibited from putting their land to a reasonable, economic use.

Winterbotham represents Tim Mallery, who owns four of the six lots in question.

Two "for sale" signs are posted high on trees, still on display two years after Mallery acquired the lots. The former owner put them up, and the new owner doesn't know how to get them down, Winterbotham said. The properties are not currently listed, but Winterbotham and the property owner would interested in hearing from anyone wishing to talk about a purchase.

No appraised value has been disclosed publicly for any of the lots, but city officials have speculated that the lots are

Collision with cow leads to lawsuit against Big Sur Ranch

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A late-night collision with a cow just South of the Bixby Creek Bridge in Big Sur caused "damage to a vehicle and personal injury" to a San Jose woman who has now filed a lawsuit seeking at least $25,000 in damages from Allan Funt Productions.

Funt owns the ranch and the cow that was involved in the collision last Dec. 28.

"Vandals knocked a lock off one of our gates," Allan Funt's son, Peter, told The Pine Cone last week. "They also left the gate open and one of our cows wandered out onto Highway 1 where apparently this woman hit it. She showed up at the ranch with damage to her car, but the cow was not injured," Funt said.

Rowe, who lives in Big Sur, tells a different story. In papers filed with Monterey County Superior Court she claims the gate was left open because of negligence. She also says the cow "lurched" into her vehicle.

Her attorney, Kevin Dougherty of Pacific Grove, says her car was "nearly totaled" and that she suffered "multiple contusions and neurological damage."

Peter Funt said he is surprised that the suit was filed, because he says his insurance company was compensating the woman appropriately, as far as he knew. "We're victims, too," he said, "because vandals are responsible. But I certainly understand the woman being upset."

Dougherty says Funt's insurance company has denied liability and refused to pay anything. And that is why he filed the suit, Dougherty says.

worth about $1 million.

Pescadero Canyon has been described as the city's natural "buffer" to the north, just as Hatton Canyon is the buffer to the east, Rio Park to the south and the beach to the west, according to Ferlito, who also chairs the Carmel Forest & Beach Commission.

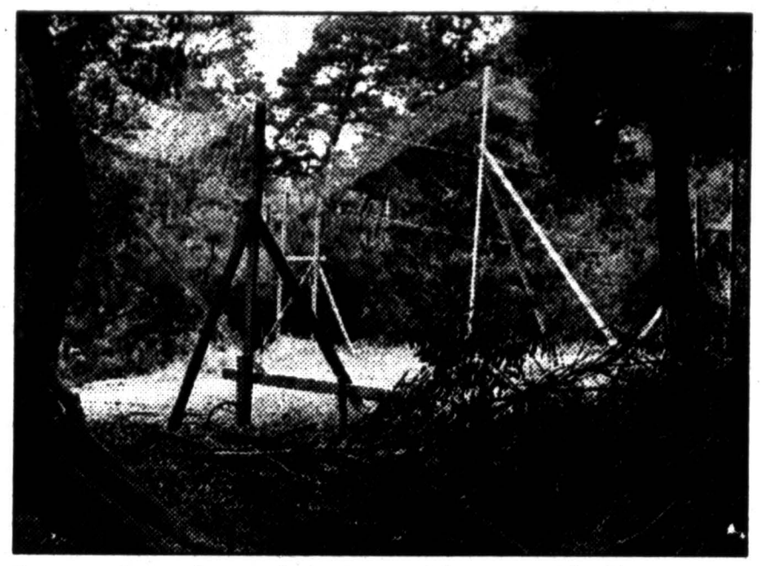
Getting the Point

Ferlito said the $100,000 raised last spring for the acquisition of Carmel Point, an acre of shoreline off Scenic just outside the city limits, came rather easily. The city of Carmel pitched in $10,000 and the rest came from private sources and from some of the proceeds of last year's 5K event ($2,000).

There are two reasons for that: First, the property had good name recognition and a high profile; second, the appraised value of the property owned by Colin Kuster was 350 percent higher than the eventual sale price.

Pescadero Canyon would be a more difficult fund-raising challenge, according to Ferlito.

"We are very interested in assisting the open space task force in acquiring land at Pescadero Canyon," said Zad Leavy, general manager of the Big Sur Land Trust, noting that he cannot comment on whether or not negotiations are now taking place with property owners.



Story poles indicate the size and location of a home proposed for the edge of Pescadero Canyon

5K race director Bill Burleigh said registration has been down slightly this year, and interested runners and walkers may register right up to 8:30 a.m. on Sunday morning. Registration on Saturday is at Vista Lobos from 10 to 4. On race day registration will be near the starting line at the foot of Ocean Avenue.

The gun sounds at 9 a.m. The 3.1-mile trek starts at Scenic and Eighth, proceeds along Scenic past Carmel River State Beach, does a loop and finishes on Scenic just south of Ocean.

Trying to keep pace with President Roosevelt on 17 Mile Drive

By JULIUS FRIEDMAN
Special to The Pine Cone

When the scholarly, physically active and immensely popular American President Teddy Roosevelt descended from his special train at the Del Monte Railroad Station in Monterey he was halfway through his two-month tour of the Western United States.

Roosevelt had come here on Sunday, May 10, 1903, to spend a day of rest at the Hotel Del Monte. He was greeted by civic leaders, mayors, judges, cattlemen, politicians and artists. Parade aficionados had rounded up some of the handsomest horses in the county for a parade they hoped would happen. That included a famous "single-footed black horse" for Roosevelt.

The horse, owned by Sam Mathews of Salinas, was described as "a real beauty." It was said the horse had an easy gait that enabled the rider to sit in the saddle for hours at a time in style and comfort.

Horses were included in Monterey County's welcome because Roosevelt had gained an international reputation as a horseman when he led his Rough Riders against Spain at San Juan Hill in Cuba in 1898.

Roosevelt had also owned a ranch in the Dakota Badlands where he, a native of New York and a graduate of Harvard University, learned to throw a lasso, brand a steer, and sit in the saddle from dawn to dusk. And while, at first, he was considered only a nonsmoking, non-drinking dude, he was a spirited athlete who was equally at home on an English, Army McClelland or Western saddle.

Roosevelt

And he was considered cowboy friendly.

Within moments after his arrival, 100 cowboys showed up to ride with Col. Roosevelt of the Rough Riders. Every man considered himself a Rough Rider who was there to protect Col. Roosevelt.

Benjamin Franklin Wright, the Southern Pacific Railroad's representative, was on the scene to make the president's stay a good one. The railroad owned the Hotel Del Monte and had roped off the entire east wing of the luxury hotel for President Roosevelt. The hotel had planned a tour, by carriage, around the famous 17 Mile Drive. But the president asked that it be converted to a horseback ride instead.

In his memoirs, Wright wrote, "The special train with the President and his party was met at Del Monte Station by Col. (Henry T.) Ward and a troop of cavalry from the Monterey Presidio and myself with a carriage to take the President the few blocks to the hotel entrance.

"Neither escort or carriage suited our distinguished visitor's mood. After the officers were introduced, he asked that the men be dismissed, and, refusing my suggestion of a lift to the hotel, started a vigorous walk through the grounds to his destination.

"A dozen or so Secret Service men, in all sorts of disguises, spread out fan-wise to protect the president, but he gave them no notice and swung along at a pace that made us jog-trot to keep up with him."

After a peaceful breakfast Roosevelt mounted his black horse, then set out with several officers from the presidio and a few citizens. They were met at the hotel exit gate by the 100 cowboys from the Monterey County ranches.

"In the midst of this wild bunch, very much at home here," wrote Wright, "the President went through the streets of Monterey, and it was hard telling the President from his rough and ready escort."

Bystanders along the Monterey streets wanted the President to stop and make a speech. Roosevelt returned their salutes but made no speeches — he never did on Sunday.

He didn't review the Monterey Presidio troops and asked Col. Ward to do away with all formality. He desired to spend a quiet sabbath.

At the Pacific Grove gate Col. Roosevelt said goodbye to the cowboys, got rid of many of the accompanying officers and civilian riders, and set the pace for the 17 Mile Drive, "through the many thousand acres of the Pacific Improvement Co. property."

"The 17 miles was accomplished in an hour and 30 minutes with the big black which had been driven as the President's mount, fleck with froth from the bit and wet with sweat from the effort."

It is noted that Col. Ward of the Monterey Presidio, who was not a cavalry man, and who was a bit on the obese side, returned to his quarters to collapse.

A later expert said that a horse travels about 14 miles an hour, and that President Roosevelt probably was clocked from the Carmel Hill Gate to the Pacific Grove Gate. It was, indeed, a very fast romp.

Roosevelt didn't collapse. He was asked how he felt.

"Feeling fine!" replied President Roosevelt. "Any chance for a hunting trip this afternoon?"

President Teddy Roosevelt was told there was a good drove of half-breed buffalo in the timber on the 17 Mile Drive.

The President replied: "No thanks. I never shoot half-breeds."

"Any chance for a hunting trip this afternoon?" the President wanted to know.

He was told there were half-breed buffalo in the timber along 17 Mile Drive

Carmel Vignette

Of Mice an' Matters

AS THE young woman browsed in the antique shop, her glance fell on a particularly graceful object.

"What is this?" she queried the shop's owner, Hella Langer.

"It is a Meissen onion pattern bowl," Hella replied, referring to a particularly famous fine china manufacturer. She waited politely for more questions.

But the woman remained silent. She only continued to stare intently at the bowl. And stare. And stare.

"Is something the matter?" Hella asked, curious at the odd behavior.

The woman took a breath, hesitated, then said, perplexed: "I see the onions — but where are the mice??"

Years after this incident, 97-year-old Hella Langer still chortles gleefully at the remembrance. But life wasn't always so humorous for this German Jew.

Born in 1900, Hella Daniel fled from the growing oppression of Jews in Germany in 1933 and, after a period in Holland, tried to settle in England. But a still ambivalent political climate led the English to deny her residency.

Hella continued on to America where she finally found success and contentment. She began a new life in Chicago, married Charles Langer and eventually made her way to Carmel with her husband where they opened an antique shop.

She credits the late William La Porte, the local auctioneer, for giving them the support they desperately needed during the precarious early days of their shop. La Porte had not thought much of his assistance but, in Hella's words, "Although he didn't remember, I didn't forget."

And so the years have passed, and the women she recalls being so "properly dressed" in Carmel — "gloves, pocketbooks, and shoes to match, with not one pair of slacks" — now walk in shorts, T-shirts and sneakers.

But each year still finds her making a trip to Germany and Denmark, armed with a long shopping list for china to satisfy the passions of her loyal customers.

"But what about England?" she is asked.

Hella considers the question for only a moment. Then, with a firm thrust of her chin, she replies: "They didn't want me when I needed them — why should I now give them my money?"

So now it's time to say: thank you, Hella, for giving Carmel a chance to appreciate you and win your loyalty.

Hatton Canyon 'throughway' should be built

Dear Editor:

Two and 1/2 million "bednights" were occupied by tourists on Monterey Peninsula (and its environs) during the year ending June 30, 1997! This staggering but real number explains why there is such a surfeit of traffic and gridlock, and why Highway 1 and Carmel Valley Rd. are long, narrow, snail-like parking lots so often.

It is appalling to learn that there is a carefully orchestrated attempt to divert to Prunedale the funds dedicated to creation of the Hatton Canyon throughway (a five-block alternate route is a freeway? Get real). The stranglehold of traffic on our peninsula can only become worse each successive year if this nefarious stratagem pursued by the ecologically brainwashed succeeds. They still don't get the message although they have lost in full trial and appellate court hearings, in the court of public opinion, and by the votes of our elected officials.

Peninsula residents, arise — you have nothing to lose except hundreds of hours squandered in traffic each year and, surely, a severe decline in our quality of life. Call your supervisors and express your views — be assured they will listen.

Cole Lester, Carmel Valley

'Don't sell Flanders'

Dear Editor:

Sale of the Flanders Mansion would be a tragic mistake and a great loss to the city. The beautiful house sits as a crown between Mission Trail Park and the Lester Rowntree Native Plant Garden; it should remain as a public monument.

Some local philanthropic organization undoubtedly could be prevailed upon to finance the needed refurbishing of the utilitarian and less visible parts of the house, rendering it a valuable and useful asset to the city.

The mansion would be eminently suitable for a scholar-in-residence, or as a peaceful home for a writer or artist or musician; it could provide space for a small library or for a research project (perhaps devoted to environmental concerns), or as a venue for lectures or chamber music recitals.

I believe grant funds could be made available to preserve this historic house as a valuable cultural amenity

Doesn't like possible expansion of walking tours

Dear Editor:

Until last week I hadn't really cared one way or the other about Carmel's famous 'walking tour.'

But having just returned from a Mediterranean Riviera trip I realize more than ever why tourists treasure Carmel. Rampant commercialism has reached insanity in many areas of the world.

Running into the 'walking tour' first day home, the brain started thinking. What happens when 20 more "tours" claim the same "freedom" . . . where does it stop?

Is the point being missed that accepting or taking money for a service is a commercial, business enterprise?

If this "walking tour" gets approval, then I look forward to starting my special 'photogenic photographic tour' around town . . . or maybe an 'art gallery' tour . . . or maybe . . . .

Jean Nieman, Carmel

'Organized onslaught'

Dear Editor:

How lovely to enjoy a cup of coffee in Il Fornaio, glance at the paper, step out into the bright blue morning and . . . into a gaggle of organized gawkers milling about, preparing for the daily organized onslaught of our quiet morning sidewalks and streets. For what? Presumably to introduce the outsiders to the customs and historic sights of our quaint little village.

Couldn't that be better done with a map, a pamphlet and a lot less congestion?

Ed Lee, Carmel

Horses and a killed lion

Dear Editor:

During the long time that my daughter and I lived in Carmel Woods, I always picked up the Pine Cone and since we have moved, friends and neighbors pick it up for me and as I wrote before, it is such a good paper. In connection with this statement, my thanks to you for the article by Tamara Grippi, Sept. 5, about the horrifying fate of the mares and foals in the hands of so called "human beings" who produce Premarin from the urine of pregnant mares. Which devil in human form came up with this nasty, ugly idea?! I better quit right here because what I would really like to say could not be printed!

Also my heartfelt thanks and lots of love to Barbara Clark and Bonnie Stoehn for their wonderful, courageous, loving work on behalf of horses.

And then the story of the mountain lion: Mr. Dormody states that his dog was attacked before by a lion, ripping his vocal chords. Why then did he leave the poor animal outside during the night? Cats and dogs should be inside as soon as it gets dark. And yes, the lion could have been tranquilized and transported to another region, but then, we are the masters over life and death! The great and noble human beings invaded the land where animals have lived since eternity. Enough, for it is an endless subject.

Once more, thanks for the Pine Cone!

Advertiser of the Week

"Since we have been advertising the sale of our home in the Carmel Pine Cone, we have experienced a greater response from that paper than any other publications we've utilized. There was a noticeable difference in the number of calls we received. Personally, we feel the format is easy to read, with emphasis on the pertinent material, making it clear and to the point.

Apparently your readers do too. Thank you CPC."

Escrow Education Corner

QUESTION: "I recently moved to Pacific Grove from Louisville, Kentucky and looking for a small home to purchase. Where I come from, there is no such thing as "escrow." You just find a trustworthy lawyer, and you all sit in a room until you hammer out a deal on a house. Sometimes it takes hours, but it gets done.

It seems like "escrow" is just another way to spend money in California! I'd like to hear why you all need it here, and they don't in Kentucky."

ANSWER: Whether you are a Buyer, Seller or Lender (principals), you will want to make sure that all conditions of your transaction have been met before property or money is transfered. In California, as in many other states, Escrow is defined as the deposit of funds, documents (or other items of value) with a neutral third party until such time as a specific event or condition takes place.

The Escrow Holder, as the neutral third party, performs this function: They impartially carry out the written instructions given by the principals. This would include many aspects: The drawing of documents (deeds, notes, subordination agreements, etc.), handling and disbursing of the money, paying off existing loans, meeting the requirements of the new lender(s); obtaining reports on the property (title, termite, geological, home inspections); prorating of taxes, assessments, homeowners dues. In the simplest terms, Escrow coordinates all portions of a particular transaction until the terms have been met. At that point, they close the deal.

The big difference between the situation you have provided, and Escrow as we in California know it is: (1) Escrow does NOT negotiate the transaction; and (2) Escrow does NOT offer or provide legal advise. This is left to your Real Estate Broker and your Attorney, whose advice we strongly suggest you seek.
